Report on the 2014 Gubernatorial Election

We tested the hypothesis that (affective) ambivalence increases the effect of issues on voter preference, and decreases that of partisanship, by estimating a logit model of the form:

\text{Vote choice} = \text{logit (party, issue, conflicting, consistent, conflicting * issue, consistent * issue)}

Our expectation was that (a) the estimated coefficient for the conflicting * issue interaction term would be positive and significant, and (b) the estimated coefficient for the consistent * issue interaction term would be negative and significant.

The results in Table A5 indicate, not surprisingly, that both partisanship and issues had a strong independent effect on voter choice in each of our basic models (Models 1 and 3). Contrary to the “effortful thinking” hypothesis, however, the coefficient for the interaction between issues and conflicting evaluations (ambivalence) is not statistically significant in either Model 2 or Model 4. While both coefficients are in the hypothesized positive direction, they are far from significant at conventional levels (\(p = 0.84\) in Model 2 and \(p = 0.63\) in Model 4) – a finding that is consistent with the results reported in Lavine, Johnston, and Steenbergen’s (2012, 241) analysis of the 2008 American National Election Study data (but only partially consistent with results for the 1984-2004 ANES cumulative file, where the conflicting * economic issues interaction is significant but the conflicting * social issues interaction is not; see p. 240). Thus, we have no basis to conclude that issues are weighted any differently by ambivalent partisans than they are by univalent partisans.

Data are from a July 2015 national survey of registered voters, conducted by qSample. The analysis is based on paired t-tests. For vote choice, difference is calculated as proportion (post-attack vote) – proportion (baseline vote). For favorability, difference is calculated as mean (post-attack) – mean (baseline). Significance tests are 1-tailed.

Data are from a July 2015 national survey of registered voters, conducted by qSample. The analysis is based on paired t-tests. For vote choice, difference is calculated as proportion (post-attack vote) – proportion (baseline vote). For favorability, difference is calculated as mean (post-attack) – mean (baseline). Significance tests are 1-tailed.

Because items comprising the three ambivalence measures illustrated in Figures A1, A2, and A3 were coded differently, each has a different range of scores when the Thompson-Zanna-Griffin algorithm is applied: affective ambivalence from -0.5 to +4.0, emotional ambivalence from -2 to +4, and evaluative ambivalence from -1 to +2. We therefore cannot determine whether the “average” level of one type of ambivalence is greater or lesser than another, or whether one distribution is flatter or more peaked.
Florida Sample

I. Background Questionnaire

We are conducting research to understand the views of registered voters about state government and some of the issues facing Florida. We are working with the Graham Center for Public Service, the Tampa Bay Times, and Bay News 9 (and News 13).

Your name was selected from a list of Florida registered voters. You don’t have to answer any question you don’t want to answer, and I want you to know this call may be recorded for quality control purposes. (This survey should take around 12 minutes.)

In November 2014, there will be an election for Florida governor. To what extent are you interested in the election? Would you say...

1 A great deal of interest,
2 A fair amount of interest,
3 Only a little interest, or
4 No interest at all?
-8 DON’T KNOW
-9 REFUSED

Question LIKELYSC
How likely are you TO VOTE in the election for Governor and other political offices in November? Where would you place yourself on a scale of 0 to 10, where 0 means there is no chance you will vote and 10 means that you are absolutely certain that you will vote?

Read the information presented below and then answer the questions that immediately follow. Remember, Do not look ahead until you have completed this stage.
Stage Two (Pre-Attack)

After reading the candidate biographies, respondents answered the following questions. Note: Only the Republican incumbent version is shown both here and below (Stages Three and Four).

Please answer the following questions. Once again, indicate the number that comes closest to describing how you feel. If you have no opinion, do not indicate any number.

1. Based on the information you currently have, which candidate would you vote for if the election were held today?

   1 Andrew Warner (Republican)
   2 Zach Peterson (Democrat)

2. Based on the information you currently have, how do you feel about each of these candidates? Depicted below is a scale with scores ranging from 1 to 7, where “1” means that you feel very unfavorably about the candidate, “7” means that you feel very favorably, and “4” means that you have an equal mix of favorable and unfavorable feelings.

   a. Andrew Warner (Republican)

      1 Very unfavorable (or negative)
      4 Equal mix of favorable and unfavorable

b. Zach Peterson (Democrat)

1 Very unfavorable (or negative)
4 Equal mix of favorable and unfavorable
7 Very favorable (or positive)

Imagine now that it is late in the campaign and you receive the information presented below in a direct mail appeal sent by challenger Zach Peterson (D). Please read this information carefully and then answer the questions that immediately follow. Do not look ahead until you have completed this stage.
Stage Three (Post-Attack, Pre-Response)

After reading one of the four issue-based attacks on the Republican incumbent made by the Democratic challenger, respondents answered the following questions.

Please answer the following questions. Once again, indicate the number that comes closest to describing how you feel. If you have no opinion, do not indicate any number.

1. Based on the information you currently have, which candidate would you vote for if the election were held today?

   1. Andrew Warner (Republican)
   2. Zach Peterson (Democrat)

Imagine that it is nearing Election Day and you receive the information presented below in a direct mail appeal sent by incumbent Andrew Warner (R). Please read this information carefully and then answer the questions that immediately follow. Do not look ahead until you have completed this stage.
Stage Four (Post-Response)

After reading one of two responses by the Republican incumbent (not part of the analysis in this paper), respondents answered the following questions.

Please answer the following questions. Once again, indicate the number that comes closest to describing how you feel. If you have no opinion, do not indicate any number.

1. Based on the information you currently have, which candidate would you vote for if the election were held today?
   1. Andrew Warner (Republican)
   2. Zach Peterson (Democrat)

2. Based on the information you currently have, how do you feel about each of these candidates? Depicted below is a scale with scores ranging from 1 to 7, where “1” means that you feel very unfavorably about the candidate, “7” means that you feel very favorably, and “4” means that you have an equal mix of favorable and unfavorable feelings.

a. Andrew Warner (Republican)

   1. Very unfavorable (or negative)
   2. Unfavorable
   3. Slightly unfavorable
   4. Equal mix of unfavorable and favorable
   5. Slightly favorable
   6. Favorable
   7. Very favorable (or positive)

b. Zach Peterson (Democrat)

   1. Very unfavorable (or negative)
   2. Unfavorable
   3. Slightly unfavorable
   4. Equal mix of unfavorable and favorable
   5. Slightly favorable
   6. Favorable
   7. Very favorable (or positive)
3. You just read a direct mail piece that Andrew Warner sent to voters in your congressional district. Do you believe that these criticisms of Zach Peterson are (1) too negative and should not be made publicly, (2) negative but acceptable within the context of a competitive political campaign, or (3) not really negative at all?

1 Too negative, should not be made
2 Negative but acceptable
3 Not really negative at all

4. Do you believe that Andrew Warner’s criticisms of Zach Peterson in this direct mail piece are (1) very fair, (2) somewhat fair, (3) somewhat unfair, or (4) very unfair?

1 Very fair
2 Somewhat fair
3 Somewhat unfair
4 Very unfair

Like an Ostrich, Andrew Warner Has His Head in the Sand about Climate Change.

Out of 100 scientists, 97 agree that climate change is real – and that it has already contributed to extreme weather events costing precious lives and billions of dollars.

What does Andrew Warner have to say about this?
- He has called it "a hoax on the American people" – even though the U.S. military says that climate change is real and poses a serious threat to our national security.

- He claims the weather is "always changing," and there is no reason to believe that recent patterns represent a long-term trend – but doesn’t it look like a trend when 14 of the 15 warmest years on record have occurred in the first 15 years of this century?

- He maintains that even if warming trends are real, there is no proof that humans bear responsibility for them – an argument that ignores considerable scientific evidence to the contrary.

Warner says he is "not a scientist."
With all of the facts against him, Andrew Warner, like many Republicans, has resorted to the ultimate cop-out:
- He insists that he is "not a scientist," and is not qualified to evaluate (or even to speak publicly about) the overwhelming evidence regarding climate change that has been presented by the scientific community.

Warner opposes restrictions on carbon pollution.
Excuse me? Not a scientist? This is a cowardly way for Warner and other climate-change deniers to avoid answering an important policy question. Meanwhile, they accept hundreds of thousands of dollars in campaign donations from the oil and gas industry, and then vote to allow those industries to spew massive amounts of carbon pollution into the air every day.

By ignoring the scientific evidence, Andrew Warner puts our families, homes, and businesses at risk both now and in the future. Warner had his chance to help find a solution . . . and failed miserably.

The people in this congressional district deserve better.

Zach Peterson Just Doesn’t Get It.

Peterson says that he wants to protect the environment, and there's nothing wrong with that. But in today's uncertain economic climate, America needs policies that not only respect our land and natural resources — but that also create jobs rather than destroying them, keep energy prices affordable for working families, and aren't beholden to environmental extremists. Are these the kinds of policies that Zach Peterson has been supporting in Congress?

You be the judge . . .

- He voted against the Keystone XL Pipeline that would transport oil from Canada to the United States and create up to 43,000 new jobs.

- He supports a moratorium on oil and gas exploration in the Gulf of Mexico, which makes the U.S. more dependent on the Middle East, threatens our national security, and costs American jobs.

- He backs stricter EPA pollution controls on coal-fired power plants — regulations that will raise electricity prices, increase the chance of blackouts, and even force some plants to close because compliance with the new rules is too costly.

- He supports President Obama's job-crushing climate deal with China that sets a new emissions-cutting goal for the United States while letting China's pollution grow for another 16 years before the limits even kick in.

Peterson puts the environment before public health and safety.

Zach Peterson and his fellow Democrats would have you believe that Republicans don't care about the environment — but that's just plain wrong. Republicans believe that people are our country's most valuable resource, and that protecting human health and safety should be the government's highest priority.

But we also believe that any effort to achieve these objectives must be balanced against its economic impact. We simply cannot afford to enact policies that cost billions of dollars, lead to higher energy prices, and destroy American jobs. This is what Peterson doesn't seem to understand.

In the end, the only job Zach Peterson fights for is his own.

The people in this congressional district deserve better.

Andrew Warner Just Doesn’t Get It.

Zach Peterson supports comprehensive immigration reform that upholds our basic principles by securing the nation’s borders, protecting workers, uniting families, and offering hardworking immigrants an earned pathway to citizenship.

What kind of immigration “reform” does Andrew Warner support?

- Rather than targeting criminals and repeat violators, he co-sponsored a bill to deport immigrant children – including those who were brought to this country at a young age by their parents.
- He opposes creating a “path to citizenship,” even for undocumented workers who pay a fine and any back taxes that are owed, hold a steady job, pass a security background check, and meet certain other requirements.
- Warner blocked a bill to expedite citizenship for foreign nationals who possess high-tech skills that could help jumpstart the American economy.
- He joined with fellow House Republicans in attaching a series of controversial immigration-related amendments to a bill funding the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) – thereby setting the stage for a possible shutdown of DHS at a time when the threat of international terrorism continued to be a major concern.

With Andrew Warner, it’s all about politics.
Warner and other immigration extremists try to score points by telling voters that immigrants have taken millions of jobs away from American workers. The only problem with this? It isn’t true.

What is the truth?
Studies actually show that immigration creates more jobs and contributes to wage growth by boosting productivity. Acknowledging these facts would not, of course, be in the best interests of ambitious politicians like Andrew Warner who prefer to play on voters’ fears rather than tell the truth about immigration.

Tell Warner that it’s time for the political grandstanding to stop.

The people in this congressional district deserve better.
When It Comes to Immigration, Zach Peterson Is Missing in Action.

In today’s tough economy, where jobs are scarce and state and local governments are strapped for cash, illegal immigration is a bigger problem than ever. Illegal immigrants take jobs away from Americans, and cost taxpayers billions of dollars.

Peterson supports amnesty for illegals.
What has Zach Peterson done to deal with this problem? He pretends it doesn’t exist. Not only does he support giving amnesty to illegals and even allowing them to become citizens, but he has voted against building a fence along our southern border on three separate occasions. Americans go through security before they get on a plane, enter a government building, or attend a ball game – but those who come to America illegally can just walk across the border. That’s why we have an immigration crisis in the first place.

Still not convinced?
Consider that Peterson has also
- voted against hiring more border patrol agents;
- supported proposals to give illegals taxpayer-funded benefits like drivers licenses and even Social Security; and
- resisted the efforts of states and towns from Arizona to Pennsylvania to enact their own tough laws, including revoking the business licenses of employers who hire undocumented workers.

Peterson allows illegals to play by their own rules.
The border is a mess – one that Zach Peterson and his fellow Democrats have helped to create. Peterson supports open borders, unconditional amnesty, and providing aid and comfort to foreign nationals who are in the country illegally. This is just wrong. America is a nation of laws, and we should welcome those who enter the country legally seeking a better future for themselves and their children. It’s time, however, to draw a line in the sand for anyone who thinks they can play by their own rules.

Zach Peterson is the best friend an illegal alien ever had.
The people in this congressional district deserve better.

Andrew Warner Hasn’t Learned from the Mistakes of the Past.

The U.S. invaded Iraq in 2003 based on falsified evidence that Saddam Hussein’s government possessed weapons of mass destruction (biological, chemical, and possibly nuclear). President Bush wanted to overthrow that government, and he took our country to war in order to do it.

Warner supported invading Iraq . . . regardless of the costs.
When Andrew Warner was recently asked whether he would have supported sending troops to Iraq in ’03, he said, “The world is a better place without Saddam Hussein.” Maybe so, but is that enough? The war in Iraq was a costly mistake in terms of both money spent and lives lost – and yet Warner and his fellow Republicans appear ready to make the same mistake again.

Warner has called for
- substantially higher levels of military spending, and
- increased funding for a national missile defense system.

Continuing this pattern of reckless spending will dramatically increase our national debt . . . unless it’s accompanied by a tax increase, which the Republicans refuse even to consider.

Making matters worse . . .
Warner says that the U.S. should consider sending new ground troops to fight the Islamic State and other terrorist groups in the Middle East, and that we should do so unilaterally if other countries choose not to be involved. He seems to have forgotten that the Iraq War dragged on for years while doing little to bring peace to the region (or to protect America from terrorist threats). What makes him think the outcome would be any different this time, least of all with a go-it-alone approach that ignores our allies’ concerns about their own security?

A reckless approach to national security:
We must be prepared to respond with any means necessary when the lives and interests of Americans are in peril, but the U.S. can no longer afford to be the world’s policeman – and military force should be viewed as a last-ditch option. Andrew Warner was wrong about Iraq a dozen years ago, and now he wants to make the same deadly mistake again. Don’t let him get away with it.

Andrew Warner is dangerously wrong on national security.

On National Security, Zach Peterson is Missing in Action.

America faces serious challenges in an increasingly uncertain world. In the Middle East, radical terrorists are on the march – destabilizing our allies, beheading Americans, and committing other brutal atrocities every day. Iran moves closer to developing a nuclear weapons capability that threatens Israel and increases the prospects of all-out war in the region.

Add to this the continued belligerence of a nuclear-armed North Korea, Russia’s invasion of Ukraine, rising Chinese hegemony in the Asia-Pacific region, and ongoing threats from cyber espionage and terrorism.

The dangers of inaction are clear – except to Zach Peterson.

How does he propose that we deal with these threats? Mostly by pretending they don't exist. Along with many of his fellow Democrats, Peterson

- has called for deep cuts in military spending, an ill-advised action that would deprive our troops of the equipment and logistical support they need;

- opposed renewal or even modification of the Patriot Act, ignoring the potential of an effective domestic surveillance program to help prevent another attack like the one on 9/11;

- is willing to negotiate with foreign nations even if they harbor or have financial ties to terrorist groups; and

- believes that we should ask other nations for permission before taking military action to protect our own security.

A weak approach to national security:

Peterson seems oblivious to the threat facing America today. True security comes from being willing and able to act – collaboratively with our allies when possible, but alone if necessary. Unlike Zach Peterson, Andrew Warner wants our enemies to have no doubt that America’s capabilities, our commitment, and our will to defeat them are clear, unwavering, and unequivocal.

Zach Peterson is dangerously wrong on national security.

Being Asked to Pay Your Fair Share Isn’t Class Warfare.
It’s Patriotism.

Millions of working- and middle-class citizens feel as if the American Dream is now out of their reach, that the opportunities open to earlier generations have vanished, and that the playing field is no longer fair or level. Meanwhile, Andrew Warner wants to lower taxes for the rich and for wealthy corporations, including those that ship American jobs overseas.

Here are the facts:

- Income inequality in America is the highest it’s been since the 1920s. The top 1% receives about 22% of all pretax income, while the top 10% receives more than half.

- A study of 31 developed countries showed that, after taking taxes into account, the U.S. ranks 2nd (behind only Chile) in the level of income inequality.

- The distribution of wealth (the value of a household’s property and assets, minus the value of its debts) is even more unbalanced, with the richest 3% holding more than half of the nation’s wealth.

Warner wants you to wait for wealth to “trickle-down” from the top. Warner claims, like Republicans always do, that the benefits of lowering taxes on the rich would eventually “trickle down” to working families in the form of new jobs and higher wages.

The only problem is that it doesn’t work this way – never has, never will. Inequality has risen steadily since the 1970s despite policies enacted by politicians, like Andrew Warner, who buy into the “trickle-down” fantasy. Even worse, while promoting tax cuts for the rich and more corporate welfare, Warner opposes:

- an increase in the minimum wage (preferring to have no minimum wage laws at all);
- child-care tax credits and paid sick leave for working families; and
- a federal jobs program aimed at rebuilding our nation’s crumbling infrastructure.

Zach Peterson wants an economic system that works for all Americans and ensures that our children grow up in an America where opportunity is real.

Andrew Warner . . . for the powerful few, not you.

Bigger Government Isn’t the Solution to Inequality.
It’s the Cause.

Under President Obama, the rich have gotten richer, income inequality has gotten worse, and there are more people in poverty. Even as the economy has started to recover, so far it has benefited only the rich – the top 1%, whose incomes have increased while the average incomes of the remaining 99% have remained stagnant or even declined.

What do Zach Peterson and his fellow Democrats want to do about this? What they always want to do – throw money at the problem: higher taxes, more spending, and bigger government. To level the playing field and revive the American Dream, everyone needs to have an opportunity to rise up. And that won’t happen until government gets out of the way so the economy can create new and better jobs for all of our citizens.

Here are some inconvenient facts that Zach Peterson doesn’t want you to know:

- If all the money spent on federal antipoverty programs were given to those below the poverty line, a family of four would have an annual income near $70,000. As it is, the poor get less than half the money appropriated in their name – most of it goes to fund the bureaucracies whose budgets Peterson wants to increase.

- Since 2008, liberal blue states (like California) have worse income inequality and lower median incomes than conservative red states (like Texas), which have resisted adopting policies such as a higher minimum wage and generous family leave that Democrats want to force on the rest of the country.

- The multitude of rules and regulations imposed by the federal government and supported by Peterson and his allies in Congress makes it harder for businesses to create new jobs – or even to keep people at work in the jobs they already have.

It’s time for the class warfare to stop.
Zach Peterson wants to punish those at the top of the economic ladder for their success. This is immoral and it won’t work. The war on poverty has had limited success over the years because it helps people deal with poverty – but does little to help them escape it. Andrew Warner believes that politicians like Peterson should stop trying to pit the rich against the poor, and focus instead on creating opportunities for all citizens to build a better life.

Zach Peterson’s ideas are outdated and ineffective.
The people in this congressional district deserve better.
