CONTENTS

3 OKLAHOMA'S BEST RETURN ON ITS INVESTMENT

Taxpayers hear a lot about the cost of higher education; the Oklahoma State Regents also wanted them to hear about the amount of money that the state's institutions pour back into the economy. The report is pretty impressive.

7 ABSORBING THE SHOCK

Observing a colleague testing new shock absorber technology on a Corvette, an OU engineering professor wondered, "What if?" Someday their joint research could earthquake-proof buildings and make highway bridges last longer.

12 THE HUNT FOR RED PROFESSORS

The controversial Loyalty Oath of 1951 was Oklahoma's answer to the communist menace on the home front. In the sixth of his series, "Treasures from the Archives," David W. Levy revisits the dilemma facing OU's faculty.

18 DINOS COME TO DUNCAN

The statewide campaign for the new Sam Noble Oklahoma Museum of Natural History got off to an early start in this civic-minded community, fueled by the enthusiasm of a school principal—with a lot of help from her friends.

22 AFTER TITLE IX

Equity for women's intercollegiate sports still is being debated nearly 16 years after federal guidelines were handed down. In spite of a few false steps and a strained budget, OU's women have upheld the Sooner tradition.

27 NO GREATER HONOR

In a biennial update of the Distinguished Professorships, Sooner Magazine pays tribute to 10 additions to the elite ranks of University of Oklahoma faculty—the David Ross Boyd, George Lynn Cross Research and Regents'.
