CONTENTS

2 THE UNSINKABLE SOONER

In 1991, faced with rising costs, declining sales and flagging interest, the University pulled the plug on a yearbook that dated back to 1905. But those who thought the matter closed underestimated the Sooner's buoyant resilience.

8 WHEN CHILDREN HAVE CHILDREN

Teen-age parents face the daunting task of caring for their children while trying to complete the education vital to building their futures. A shoe-string program at OUHSC deals realistically with this growing societal problem.

13 YOU CAN'T TELL THE PLAYERS WITHOUT A PROGRAM

Archivists reach into their treasure troves and come up with the darnedest assemblages of memorabilia that trace an institution's history—for instance, the Western History Collections' exhibit of 75 years of OU football programs.

17 FROM SLIDE RULES TO CYBERSPACE

Remember when student engineers were identifiable by the slide rules swinging from their belts? Today the Sooner engineer is never without his or her own portable laptop computer, a new requirement for entering freshmen.

21 BILL HANCOCK'S ROAD TO THE FINAL FOUR

"March Madness." "The Big Dance." No bigger spectacle exists in college athletics than the NCAA men's basketball tournament. But the Sooner who runs this show of shows still remembers OU-Texas Weekend as "the big one."

26 THE DAY THE PRESIDENT WENT FISHING

On the 50th anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision admitting Ada Lois Sipuel Fisher to the OU law school, historian David Levy recounts a little-known sidelight to that story in his series, "Treasures from the Archives."

ON THE COVER

The new president was shocked that the University of Oklahoma no longer published a yearbook. A stalwart band of students shared his dismay and agreed to bring back the venerable Sooner from the graveyard of discarded traditions. See Page 2.
