ON THE COVER

As the only surgeon in the rural preceptorship program, Dr. Jim Lindsey, of Pauls Valley, left, is in great demand by fourth-year OU medical students who, like Jeff Garrett, are interested in a surgical residency. Since Lindsey also treats general medicine patients, Garrett experienced a variety of medical problems, besides standing first assist in the operating room. For his part, Lindsey claims to learn as much from the young doctors-in-training as they do from him. Story on Page 4.

4 MEDICAL MENTORS IN RURAL OKLAHOMA

The OU College of Medicine's preceptorship program matches eager, fourth-year medical students with seasoned physicians in the state's small communities for a month of hands-on, eye-opening experience.

9 TREASURES FROM THE ARCHIVES

In 1937 Historian Alfred Thomas left the Depression-buffed University of Oklahoma for greener pastures, but he felt compelled to explain his actions to a professorial mentor. "The future," he wrote, "... is very dark."

12 HIS HONOR, THE MAYOR

Richard Arrington was a scientist, an educator, but times were tense, demanding courageous solutions to the wrenching problems of a Southern city in need. This son of a black sharecropper stepped up to the challenge.

16 WRESTLING WITH SUCCESS

With renewed determination, Jack Spates' warriors moved into the sparkling new Port Robertson Wrestling Center amid the festivities associated with honoring a coaching legend. Good results were not long in coming.

22 AT THE TOP OF HIS GAME

The University just about ran out of honors to bestow on Bill Paul, as student or alumnus. Fortunately the American Bar Association stepped in to make this Pauls Valley native the country's top legal spokesman.

26 KEEP ON COOKING

In the tradition of women's organizations everywhere, the University Women's Association published a cookbook—favorite recipes, special-occasion menus, entertaining tips, with some Sooner memories for good measure.
