THE SEED SOWER: STANDING WATCH—Heaving oranges from the south oval onto Owen Field would require a pretty good arm, but apparently some students thought “The Seed Sower” was up to the task. And who knows? Later in the day, after the Sooners’ 31-14 victory over Nebraska, oranges littered the field. The citrus tossing in anticipation of an Orange Bowl appearance, a practice strongly discouraged by OU officials, had been a nearly forgotten tradition until the stellar 2000 football season. The recently installed 12-foot-tall bronze sculpture is artist-in-residence Paul Moore’s representation of the central figure from the University seal.
