THAT “CAMPUS” FEEL—Anchoring the west entrance to the Stanton L. Young Walk at OU’s Health Sciences Center in Oklahoma City is the third of Paul Moore’s “Seed Sower” sculptures, one for each of the University’s campuses. The Walk is the focal point of a major beautification project concluded last year, which encompasses gardens, fountains, sculpture, benches and brick sidewalks—all privately funded. The project was designed to provide a cohesive campus environment for HSC, which recently added a student center and its first on-campus student apartments and townhouses.
