FLOYD E. MILLER

Floyd E. Miller, '18 arts-sc., Skiatook editor, died Sunday, January 11, of pneumonia. An account from The Tulsa Tribune says: "Miller was a self-made man.

"Born near Kiowa, Kansas, he came to Oklahoma with his parents at the age of four, and they settled near Manchester, Oklahoma. There he received his earlier education and, at the time other boys were entering offices and stores, considering that early education was insufficient, Miller was making his plans to continue his schooling.

"His father, Freeman Miller, a member of the territorial senate and now a prominent lawyer of Stillwater, was unable to be of assistance, and young Miller began working his way through school, trying to achieve his ambition to be a teacher.

"It was while he was working his way through Northwestern State normal at Alva, that he had his first experience with the newspaper business. He went to work on the Alva Daily Pioneer.

"After his graduation at Alva, Miller became superintendent of the Lambert Oklahoma schools and carried on his journalistic career as the publisher of a small paper there. Then he went to the University of Oklahoma to take his M. A. degree.

"While at the university, he became publicity man for state food administration during the war, and when he finished the university course in 1918, he went to Jenks as superintendent of schools. There he founded the Jenks News and edited it in time outside his school.

"Going to Skiatook in 1922 he purchased and became editor of the Skiatook News. He took a prominent part in civic and political activities. Last year he was president of the chamber of commerce and twice was candidate for the Democratic nomination to the state legislature, the last time last summer. Besides his Skiatook interests, he was part owner of a Tulsa drug store.

"He was a member of the Skiatook Presbyterian church, Masonic lodge, Akdar Shrine and the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias.

"Funeral services were to be held at the First Presbyterian church at Skiatook Tuesday morning at 9:30. Burial will be at Stillwater.

"He is survived by his widow, three sons, Glee, Floyd, jr., and Freeman; the father; the mother, Mrs Allie McAdams, Anthony, Kansas, two sisters, Miss Flora Miller, Anthony, Kansas, and Mrs Jess Watson, Oklahoma City."

In Soonerland, Sooner sports patrons who like tennis may look forward with eagerness to seeing the Texas-Oklahoma dual tennis match on the varsity courts, April 25.

Annually, the University of Texas produces what are probably the outstanding intercollegiate tennis players in the nation. Allison, Bell, Barnes, Thalheimer, White—these Longhorns have established their prowess in Davis cup, national intercollegiate and sectional tournaments all over the United States. Although the Sooners lost all six of their matches to the 1931 Longhorn team at Austin last fall, they carried the Texans to three sets in three matches and gave a good account of themselves in two others. Oklahoma conquered Southern Methodist and Rice at Dallas and Houston on that invasion.

Coach Lawrence "Jap" Haskell's baseballers, co-champions of the "Big Six" conference last spring, open the home baseball season April 24 and 25 with two contests against Missouri at Owen field.

The Missouri tennis team also comes to Norman for a dual conference match on April 24.

pone in potlicker. "Take the case of crackling bread and chitterling times. The potlicker and the chitterlings are eaten at the same meal of victuals; in fact, one takes a bite of the chitterlings and then a sip or two of potlicker, using the same pone of bread with them both." It will never do to crumble the cornbread in the potlicker. And here is the governor's recipe for potlicker: "It is made from boiling turnip greens and a piece of salt fat meat for several hours. The greens and turnips are taken out of the pot and the liquid remaining is potlicker." The controversy attracted national attention.

The strike was called by union engineers as a result of granting by the school board of an electrical contract for a new building to the low bidder, a non-union employer. Union labor in the main applauded the decision of the board and the principal mover in closing the high school admitted the union organization had "made a mistake" and asked the public to forget the incident.

The first marriage would prove a failure and I would marry a woman of money. There was some dissatisfaction with my present abode, a safe assumption in this moving metropolis. I must sign no contract without managing a loophole for escape, as who wouldn't in these times? 'When you were twenty,' said the astrologer, 'you were interested in law.' She told me that sitting on the other side of an ordinary desk in a steel-skeleton office building—and she was right. When I was twenty, I was registered in a law school. . . . 'It is not too late. You should take up law at once. You should throw everything over and start. The stars show that you can rise to great fame as a lawyer, not mere success but great success.'"

FIRST STEPS IN FLYING

descend and the left end to rise, thus tilting the whole airplane to the right.

Similarly, moving the stick to the left tilts the airplane to the left, and this is done when making a left turn. The plane as a whole is thus banked at an angle just necessary to prevent skidding at that particular speed, and it is this angle which the student must learn to "feel" in the air. Likewise, since a driver cannot bank his automobile nor automatically change the banking of a highway curve, he must adjust the speed of his car to fit each curve he comes to and must be able to "feel" or "sense" the correct speed at which he may safely pass around these curves.

With these three control motions, the student must become so familiar that he always senses the correct combination to impart to each, and hand, eyes and feet must work simultaneously and in perfect co-ordination.

When he has learned the use of the controls, the student is allowed to take the stick, without help from the instructor, and to try and maintain a straight, horizontal course of flight. This is not as easy as it sounds, especially along the base of the Rocky mountains with occasional descending and ascending air currents and few horizontal ones in between. The student has to completely forget "joy riding" and must watch the altitude and the wing-tips and nose of his plane along the horizon, besides learning to sense whether he is skidding or not.

Of course there are many other things to learn besides straight flying, turning, climbing and diving, but for the beginner, these are the first steps.

Soon after he learns to take off and land correctly, to do vertical banks, study stalled-flight conditions and tail spins and then recovery from high altitudes, gliding with power off, forced landings and acrobatics. These require an even greater alertness, judgment and co-ordination of the faculties, which are necessarily so well exemplified in our most well known successful flyers.

GREETINGS

in chemical engineering, eight graduating this spring.

The personnel of the school includes Guy Y. Williams, director, C. T. Langford, professor of chemical engineering and C. R. Bailey, instructor.

Our purpose is to develop chemical engineers with sufficient fundamental and theoretical knowledge to solve new problems in chemical engineering as well as carry on the routine operation in this field.

FROM J. F. BROOKES

The annual St. Pat's occasion is at hand. It is opportune and natural to think of similar occasions of the past and associate with them the names and personalities of former students. Many interesting impressions remain as we think of this singular occasion when the engineering student comes into his own, so to speak. It is a time when scholastic work pauses and youthful enthusiasm holds sway. Truly the graduating engineer feels that his "college course" is complete if "St. Pat" has smiled upon him.

Now for a word about the school of civil engineering. The number of students enrolled is larger than in past years, indicating a satisfactory growth. This year a highway material laboratory was established for the testing and investigation of materials of this specific field. The curriculum has been revised from time to time in order to maintain proper correlation with the requirements of recognized educational policy and the demands of present day engineering practice. Scholastic work is reflected by the successful work being performed by the graduates in practice.

The engineer, by virtue of the kind of training he has received, may be a most valuable member of society if his attitude toward the community be one of service. It is hoped that former graduates are meeting this responsibility in a fine way as well as achieving success in the more technical and professional fields.

Acknowledgement is made of the assistance rendered by our former students and friends in pointing out the possibilities and advantages of a college education. Their efforts have resulted in many capable young men entering school and graduating with records of definite achievement.

Therefore, on behalf of the faculty and the students of the school of civil engineering, I wish to extend cordial greetings. And let me remind you that a message or, better, a visit is always acceptable. In this way the bonds of friendship are strengthened and the glory of O. U. kept ever bright.
