

board of directors of the alumni association, and of a faculty committee elected to take part in choosing an educational head. He was recommended by six university presidents. Doctor Lindley, while already known as the man who has done more to carry education and the university to the people of Kansas, than any other factor, is just starting on his greatest steps as an educator.

The new board has declared its policy of non-interference with the internal details of administration of the state's five educational institutions, holding the head of the institution directly responsible. Chancellor Lindley's insistence on a legal settlement of a difficult situation is held by many to have been a decided victory in the cause of academic freedom in Kansas and in the nation.

Doctor Lindley comes from Quaker stock, his great grandfather, Jonathan Lindley, a member of the Society of Friends, offered a resolution in the North Carolina legislature to free all slaves. Later, he and some other associates liberated their slaves, and migrated to Indiana in 1811. There Mr Lindley was a member of the first board of trustees of Indiana University and as such assisted in location of the university.

Reverend Jenkins is well known as cowboy plainsman, soldier, teacher, college professor, college president, lecturer, author, metropolitan newspaper editor, World war correspondent, religious journalist, world-traveller, statesman, ordained minister, and for more than twenty-two years, minister of the great city church in Kansas City.

This versatile leader has had a rich and adventurous background of experience. In 1930, Doctor Jenkins visited China and Japan, traveled over the Trans-Siberian railway to Russia, coming home from Germany, thus completing the circuit of the globe.

Like the prophetic poet-preachers of old, Doctor Jenkins is a man of affairs; when the issue of Christian idealism is at stake, he is ever to be found, with rare understanding and courageous disinterestedness. He took his part in Europe during the World war as a minister. He hates war, and for years has been a powerful element in the fight for world peace. Doctor Jenkins is editor-in-chief of The Christian, religious journal.

DEATHS

ERWIN CHILES

Erwin Chiles '31 eng., died April 8 in Chickasha as a result of loss of blood caused from an accidental cut from a pocket knife with which he was cutting redbud. Employed by the Pritchard Anderson Oil company at Cyril, he was active in the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

RAYMOND C. BERRY

Raymond C. (Pat) Berry, ex '15, died April 8 in Norman. He was forty-one years old, and had been in ill health for some time. He was a member of Kappa Alpha, and of the American legion. He was graduated from Cumberland university in law and operated two Norman theaters. He was a brother of Dr Charles Berry, '14 med., Oklahoma City, Walter Berry, ex '18, of Enid; and Mrs Dow Ham ex '21, of Dallas, Texas.

YEAR BY YEAR

Miss Roberta Robey, '14 arts-sc., was a visitor to the campus early in April. Miss Robey is owner and manager of the Villagra Bookshop in Santa Fe, New Mexico, which is not only a fine bookshop but a gathering place for the artistic and writing group of Santa Fe. Miss Robey went from Norman to Chicago and from there to New York City where she was to set sail late in April for a stay of several months in England.

1917

Miss Iris Boughman '17 arts-sc., teacher of English in Classen high school, Oklahoma City, is president of the Oklahoma council of English teachers. Working in accord with the state department of education and the extension division of the university, the group is considering revision of courses in high school English.

1920

Otto Walter, '20 arts-sc., '21 eng., former instructor in electrical engineering and physics, now assistant professor of electrical engineering in the College of the City of New York, gave a radio address on "Research in Engineering" over WNYC, the municipal broadcasting station, New York City on March 1, 1932.

1923

Mrs Edith Stith Triplett, '23 nurse, assistant superintendent of Nurses, Oklahoma Hospital for Crippled Children, Oklahoma City, was to attend the national convention of American Nurses Association in San Antonio, Texas in April.

Dr Kirt G. Parks, '23 med., 1141 North-west Thirty fourth, Oklahoma City, is doing post graduate work at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.

Jack Bolles, '26 civil eng., who completed his graduate work at Harvard university early this spring, is off on another archeological exploration out of Chichen-Itza, Mexico. He writes: "My stay in Chichen-Itza lasted one month when news came through from the American Chicle company here that their men, bleeding chicle, had located two or three new Mayan cities in the southeastern corner of the state. A party of four of us are now bound south into what is the least known of Central American jungles. We hope to locate, map, and study these ruins. Heavy rains have made travel next to impossible and malaria is thick in the air. The possibilities are excellent that we will find something of importance. We are now in the center of a log wood swamp in central Campeche. A windmill, four shacks, and many half starved dogs, hogs, and chickens, along with a few 'chicleros' compose this point." Mr Bolles has travelled extensively in Europe

Pearson, '29 arts-sc., law, Pawhuska attorney, was appointed United States commissioner for the northern district of Oklahoma with headquarters at Pawhuska by Federal District Judge Franklin E. Kennamer. He will continue his general practice of law in addition to the other duties of the commissioner's office.

THE SPIRIT OF THE WEST

a dozen cars may be found parked there almost any day unless an official is on guard to tell motorists to move on. The natural conclusion must be that either those who park cars on the university oval cannot read or else they have no great respect for the law per se.

Men who served overseas with the army of occupation will remember that if a European soldier started to enter a village and saw a sign "Verboten" he would turn back. But officers might plaster "Verboten" signs over a whole village and they did not keep the American doughboy out unless backed up with plenty of M. P.'s with life size clubs and short and hasty tempers. The American doughboy did not believe in signs!

Throughout the whole United States this disregard for the letter of the law is apparent. The young man leans back against the "No Smoking" sign in a public building, reaches back to strike a match on it to light his cigaret and if someone remonstrates he is likely to defend himself on the ground that it did not say "positively." We read the sign: This is Smithville—Speed limit fifteen miles." We slow down to thirty and go blithely on.

Yet curious as it may seem the American who has little respect for the law has a profound faith in laws as a sovereign cure all for all economic, social and political ills. "There ought to be a law" is an American maxim. Once the law is passed we feel that our troubles are over. We have the law. Everything is all right. We forget that laws are not self enforcing.

Temperance and the effect of alcohol upon the tissues of the human body were once taught in every public school in the country. Then came national prohibition and we largely ceased our efforts along these lines. It was now against the law to manufacture or sell intoxicants. Our worries were ended. It took us some years to realize that the problem was not yet solved; that it takes education as well as legislation to root out such an evil.

The western spirit is a youthful spirit. The West was the kingdom of youth. On the frontier a man forty years of age was regarded as an old man. This spirit of youth persists in the newer western states in most remarkable fashion. We are young in our speech, our dress, our pleasures. "Come to see me" say the Oklahoman of any age, "Come this evening. I will take you out in my new car and show you the city. We have a beautiful speedway, an excellent country club, parks, swimming pools, and all the features of a real city. After we have seen the town I will take you to a restaurant—a nice bright place with a jazz orchestra and we will have dinner. Then after dinner we will go to the picture show and see Flaming Youth or something similar."

"Come to see us" says the staid, sedate Bostonian of the old school, "Come next Wednesday evening to tea. We will have tea—baked beans, brown bread and other good New England dishes. Then after tea we will build a fire on the hearth, pop some corn and take turns in reading aloud from the Atlantic Monthly."

That in the slang parlance of modern youth is their idea of "making whoopee." It does not appeal to the average westerner. He represents youth; the New Englander mature age.

Another characteristic of the western spirit is a lack of taste in art, literature and music. This many people will bitterly deny, but its truth is all too apparent. Popular taste—or lack of taste—in art is revealed by the pictures to be seen on the walls of the average American home. The tabloids and confession magazines that litter our newsstands give eloquent testimony as to what most people read; while the blaring radios of some millions of homes shriek in trumpet tones the story of the music so many Americans love.

The westerner of the early days was a jack at all trades. Settling on a tract of land in the forest he cut down the trees and constructed himself a log cabin. To that extent he was a carpenter and builder. He made some crude furniture and was to that extent a cabinet maker. He planted and cultivated crops and was thus far a farmer. He fought Indians and so was in a sense a soldier. If the children became ill he administered certain "home remedies" and was to this extent a doctor. He engaged in trade and so became something of a merchant.

This great versatility had two curious results. The westerner or the region permeated by western ideas has always lacked respect for training and experience. It is currently believed that the man who fails at one thing will fail at another and the man who succeeds at one thing will succeed at another because the qualities which make for success or failure are inherent in the individual rather than derived from training and experience. The westerner believes that he has ample historical proof of the truth of this idea. He points to such men as John Quincy Adams and James Buchanan splendidly equipped by training and experience for the presidency and compares their success and fame with that of the comparatively inexperienced and untrained Jackson and Lincoln. In every state and county we choose officials without the slightest training or experience in the technical and complex work they must perform.

In the second place the average western American feels himself entirely competent to advise the technical expert upon the details of the latter's work. The average man on the street can tell you exactly how the banker should operate his bank or the editor his newspaper, where the superintendent of schools or the college president is wrong, and can even point out the mistakes made by the doctor in his diagnosis of a case.

The spirit of the West is apparent in education. The frontier needed surveyors, doctors, teachers, bookkeepers, and young men weary of the hardships and toil of frontier farm life sought an education as a means of escaping from a situation they had grown to dislike. As a result education to most people came to be something to live by rather than something to live with. The utilitarian in education flourished; interest in the cultural subjects languished.

"I want my boy to have an education" says the toil-worn, hard-handed farmer, "so he can make a living without having to dig it out of the ground as I have had to do."

"My father wants me to study arithmetic mostly this year," a country boy once said to me, "so I can do business and figure the price of things. He says I needn't study grammar and things like that. Grammar won't learn me nothin'."

The result of these western ideas of education is all too apparent. The man imbued with the spirit of the West does not believe in the truth of the old saying: "You cannot get something for nothing." He has seen it proved false too often in the matter of free, or very cheap, western lands. A homestead is taken and within a few years a railroad is built, a town grows up on the land or nearby and the unearned increment makes the original homesteader well to do. In other cases oil is discovered on a piece of worthless land and the poor struggling farmer who owns it is suddenly raised to affluence.

The average man has seen these things happen so often that he has become convinced that economic independence is not to be secured by hard work, economy, and good business management. Rather it is to be secured by purchasing at a low price something which will, without effort on his part, greatly increase in value.
