

about what is innate and what acquired, to formulate an intelligent eugenical program. If we did possess the knowledge we have no one to whom it could safely be intrusted. Shameless propagandizing and the glossing of inconvenient facts and lack of knowledge is purely the result of ethnic and class prejudices however it may masquerade in the guise of science.

As Professor Stanley Hall once said, "Man has not yet demonstrated that he can remain permanently civilized." The statement might be amended to read that man has never become truly civilized in the higher sense of the term. He has accumulated a stupendous array of facts and beliefs, his conquest of portions of the physical environment has proceeded apace and he has contrived an amazing number of mechanical wonders. But real civilization is a more subtle thing than motor cars, radios, and notions of space-time. We have vastly increased the material complexity of our lives; psychologically, it is doubtful whether we have changed one whit since the reindeer and the mammoth roved over western Europe and Cro-Magnon man sketched his paintings on the walls of Palæolithic caves.

It may be that innate racial differences in mentality and emotion really exist but the truly impartial scientist will admit that he does not know one way or the other. However, there is fair certainty on one point. Some races may or may not be superior to others but they all share in the common heritage of mankind bequeathed us by our apelike fore-bears; a dull stupidity in which flares, at rare intervals, a spark of reason. In another 20,000 years it may emit a stronger light.

cost of a hundred thousand dollars while men stand shivering in breadlines and pace the sidewalks without a place to sleep.

It is not to be expected that a righteous wrath will be vented by the native stock of the city. By birth, by training, they have become too inured to the whole system. Besides, tolerance is their virtue. There are, naturally, those in the city itself, of its own stock, who revolt in mental abhorrence of these conditions, but the noblesse oblige of their natures, the finely drawn philosophy which suffers itself to be concerned with the moles in the eye civic only when assured of the impecca-
