

In the Headlines

Ida Z. Kirk (top left), who has been directing plays at the University for the past thirteen years, will produce Molnar's clever comedy, "Olympia," February 9 and 10 on the campus. Her presentations of other Molnar plays, "The Swan" and "The Guardsman," have been popular with Playhouse Patrons. Charles E. Rogers, '14as (center), head of the department of industrial journalism at Kansas State Agricultural college, Manhattan, recently was elected president of the American Association of Schools and Departments of Journalism at the national convention in Chicago. Rogers was an Oklahoma newspaper man before assuming his position at the Kansas college. Frank Buttram, '10geol, '12M.A. (right), became the central figure in state relief work when he was appointed to co-ordinate all branches of federal work being carried on in the state. His problem will be to see that all types of federal aid activities are carried on in an efficient manner. Fred Capshaw, '13as, '14law, Oklahoma City (right center), former chairman of the state corporation commission, was in the headlines in January when he headed an expedition to Colombia, South America, to investigate foreign properties that promised the production of precious metals. He lesa year spent several months in Mexico investigating gold and silver deposits.

H. H. Herbert, guiding hand and director of the University school of Journalism for the past twenty years, was elected secretary-treasurer of the American Association of Teachers of Journalism recently at Chicago. He also was chosen as secretary-treasurer of the American Association of Schools and Departments of Journalism. He has served in this position for both groups since 1929.

