

Medical Alumni News

By Ida Lucille Wallace

THE Medical School had an interesting exhibit at the Hall of Health, held in conjunction with the state medical meeting in Tulsa. The Hall of Health was presented by the Tulsa County Medical Association primarily for education of the general public in medical progress. The Medical School's display included among other things a map of the campus of the school and its two teaching hospitals, showing present and proposed buildings and additions, photographs, etc. One of the most interesting charts showed that 494 graduates of the medical school are now practicing in 139 cities in 66 of the 77 counties of the state of Oklahoma.

Alumni of the Medical School who gave papers at the meeting of the Oklahoma State Medical Association at Tulsa in May are Dr. Grady Mathews, '25med, state health commissioner, Oklahoma City; Dr. Leroy Sadler, '29med; Dr. John F. Burton, '21; Dr. O. A. Watson, '29med; Dr. Harry Wilkins, '27med; and Dr. James P. Luton, '33med, all of whom practice in Oklahoma City; and Dr. F. P. Fry, '36med, Frederick; Dr. J. A. Blue, '34med, Guymon; Dr. C. A. Traverse, '33med, Alva; and Dr. E. M. Gullatt, '32med, Ada.

Dr. Daisy Van Hoesen Cotton, '37med, is now completing a year's residency at Oklahoma City General Hospital.

Dr. Miriam Hubbell, '35med, is now located on the staff of the Olive View Sanitarium, Olive View, California.

Dr. Rheba Huff, '38med, has recently received a residency appointment in the maternity service of the County of Los Angeles Hospital.

Dr. J. Samuel Binkley, '30, nationally known authority on cancer, has been named assistant managing director of the American Society for the Control of Cancer. Managing director Dr. C. C. Little, in making the appointment, said that the young surgeon had distinguished himself as one of the nation's foremost educators of laymen in cancer conditions and control.

Dr. Binkley recently completed a tour of Oklahoma, addressing 13,000 laymen and 1,142 physicians in forty cities, on the subject of cancer. Now a resident of New York City, he is assistant chief of the chest department of Memorial Hospital there.

After receiving a bachelor's degree from the University of Oklahoma, he earned his medical degree at Harvard University.

Dr. Gertrude Wilber, '37med, is now located at Sea View Hospital, Staten Island, New York.

The University and Crippled Children's Hospitals observed National Hospital Day, Sunday, May 12, with an open house.
