Magazine compliments Phillips

Time Magazine, looking southwest to Oklahoma, recently printed a colorful article on the chief occupant of the State Capitol, Governor Leon C. Phillips, '16 law. The state auditor's report had been released announcing that the Governor had cut state expenditures $1,570,000 below appropriations since last July 1, and a representative of his had gone to Ohio to demand that Oklahoma's "Jean Valjean," Carlton B. Chilton, be extradited. So "Big Red," the name given him by Time, was in the news.

"Oklahoma breeds big, tough, silent men with hearts of gold—some good, some bad, some eccentric—but always men," the article begins. "In Oklahoma's heritage of oil, Indians, covered wagons, shoulder-holsters, pellagra, dust, drouth and bad lands, there is no place for sissies. Sooners will certainly not stand for sissies in their governor's mansion.

"Oklahoma governors must be strong men to get elected, stronger to survive.

"No sissy is Governor Leon C. Phillips, 49 years old . . . who has amassed more legal powers than any Oklahoma governor before him. He rides hard on the legislature, shoos strays back in line, keeps them milling and mooing. Not once in his first year in the state saddle has he had to head off a stampee."

Time credited him with these achievements: cut state employes by 2,000; reorganized the highway department and wiped out a $5,000,000 deficit in a few months with cold cash; cut common school appropriations from $12,800,000 a year to $11,500,000; virtually canceled a building program including a $1,000,000 auxiliary state office building; and enacted his entire program with no new taxes.
