Bust of Sequoyah

Created by Harold Castor, '39fa, art instructor in the Oklahoma City, schools, a bust of Sequoyah stands in the halls of Tulsa Central High School as a gift of the Class of '41. The class also presented a similar bust of Will Rogers.

Mr. Castor engaged in extensive research to determine the physical appearance of Sequoyah. No photographs were ever made of the Indian, the camera not being in extensive use at the time he lived, and the only painting of him in existence is a portrait by the artist King, who maintained a studio in Washington and painted the Indians when they arrived on official business of their tribes. There is, however, a large amount of written description of his character and personality and a little about his physical features.

Mr. Castor studied that material and used it as a basis upon which to create a bust representing all the known characteristics of the Indian scholar. Mr. Castor says, "Of course one cannot be sure it is an unimpeachable likeness. It is my interpretation of the great man which I feel contains the qualities he possessed."

Both Mr. Castor and Mrs. Castor (Delia Franklin, '36fa) are artists whose works have been recognized throughout the state. Mrs. Castor's field is oil painting.

Traveling Professors

Proof that the University campus is statewide is furnished in figures compiled by the Bureau of Lectures and Entertainment which show that 165 faculty members appeared on 1,400 programs over the state last year.
