Little Helen Hayes

MARY IVONNE AXELSON

Golden-haired Mary Ivonne Axelson, although only 12 years old, has shown Washington, D. C., radio audiences in the last year that as an actress she has a practically unlimited repertoire.

Daughter of Ivar Axelson, '28ma, senior economist with the U.S. Treasury Department, and Mary McDougal Axelson, '33, well known playwright and author, Mary Ivonne has been making radio and public appearances in the national capital since last summer.

The versatile young actress sings, dances and gives dramatic readings. And she enjoys playing the part of a witch as much as a pretty-girl part, which she proved recently in New York by portraying a witch in a children's play with what was described as "blood-curdling energy."

Recently Mary Ivonne has been doing her part for national defense by appearing on benefit performances for veterans and smokes-for-Yanks shows. She is one of the troupe of entertainers sent out by the Washington post of the American Legion to entertain soldiers and veterans and at civic and patriotic rallies.

Mary Ivonne has play-acted for years unofficially. Often in the evenings, she and father Ivar present the news highlights of the day in a little skit of their own, with each taking the part of a politician or national figure.

She's a favorite with staff members at the radio station where she broadcasts and the station director calls her a "little Helen Hayes." An opportunity to act in a radio serial was refused because it would interfere with school work.

Wanted: 75,000 Engineers

fields in which dangerously low levels of manpower are found to exist. Subsequent to the declaration of war, local selective service agencies have in many instances proceeded to classify registrants without regard to the fact that they are in training or preparation for activities, the maintenance of which is essential to the national health, safety, or interest, and war production. This is particularly true in cases of engineering, chemical, physics, medical and dental students."

Mr. Hershey states further: "War industries are undergoing a hitherto unknown expansion. Aeronautical, civil, electrical, chemical, mining, metallurgical, mechanical, and radio engineers, together with physicists and chemists are essential to insure a sufficient flow of material for the armed forces, and industry must look to the engineering, chemical, and physics students now in training to meet their present and future requirements."

The Navy itself has adopted a long range plan for recruiting officer personnel from students now enrolled in engineering colleges throughout the country. With the nation involved in a war that covers the globe, the Navy is being expanded just as rapidly as possible, and qualified officers are a vital necessity. Under the Navy's plan, any junior or senior engineer making satisfactory scholastic progress and who can pass a physical examination may enlist in the Navy now on a probationary reserve status until he completes work for a degree. After graduation he will receive a commission as ensign in the Navy. Students who enrol while juniors will receive an intensive three-month training period between junior and senior years.

A comparison of the curriculum offered at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis with that of the College of Engineering at the University of Oklahoma shows that the basic training is the same. It is the opinion of many that the United States will have to maintain a two-ocean Navy far into the future and that engineering students accepted for commission as ensigns now will in many cases continue naval work as a career after the close of World War II.

The increased demand for engineers is likely to continue even after the close of the war causes a decline in the special war industries. Most plants built now for the manufacture of war materials are designed with the object in mind that after the war they must be converted to make products for civilian needs.

Whether or not the industrial change-over is a success will be the direct responsibility of the engineer—and indirectly the responsibility of the school that trained him.
