SEVERAL MEMBERS of the Medical School faculty were on the program at the meeting of the Oklahoma Academy of Science held early in December at Stillwater.

Dr. Samuel A. Corson, assistant professor of physiology, gave three illustrated lectures, "Comparative Permeability of Living Cells to Cations and Anions," "A Quantitative Method for Microinjecting Controlled Quantities of Aqueous Solutions into Living Cells," and "An Optical Torsion Micro-lever for Measuring Cell Permeability."

Dr. Donald B. McMullen, assistant professor of bacteriology, gave an illustrated talk on "Recent Developments in the Control of Water Itch." "Gasometric Studies of Carbohydrate Oxidation by Hydrogen Peroxide" was the subject of a joint paper given by Dr. Mark R. Everett, professor of biochemistry, and Louis E. Diamond, instructor in biochemistry.

A joint paper on "The Catalysis of Carbohydrate Oxidation by Iron and Copper Salts" was presented by Dr. Everett, Dr. Fay Sheppard, '27med, instructor in biochemistry, and Clifford F. Gastineau, '41ba, a junior medical student from Norman.
