"I never felt so sure of anything"

"The most exciting thing that has happened to me for some time has been the reading of an advance copy of a book that came all the way from Norman, Oklahoma. The book is called

Ziba

by JAMES PIPES

and is published by the University of Oklahoma Press. . . . I read it by chance and it has hit me like a block-buster.

"James Pipes has kept a country store in Forty-Acre which is down in the swamplands of Louisiana. He has listened to the Negroes who came to his store to trade and lounge and gamble. He took notes. He assimilated the picturesque and poetic language and flaming imagination of Negroes from sawmills, cotton plantations, levee camps, and cane farms. He then wrote a book of long poems out of the tales they told . . . a book . . . merely crammed with natural poetry and humor, and most exciting to read aloud. He has caught the magical word-sense and the rich music of the Negro improvisations. This is a book; a real contribution to our literature. I never felt so sure of anything."—William Rose Benét in The Saturday Review of Literature.

"The publication of Ziba is an event, a truly exciting event for anybody who is at all interested in the efforts of men to capture the poetry of America and her various regions. Mr. Pipes has managed to capture beautifully the imagination, the spiritual quality, the earthiness, and the poetry in the Negroes of whom he has written."—Lew Sarett.
