O.U. Engine Schools—

curriculum are trained to be consulting engineers whose duties include planning municipal improvements, water supplies, sewage disposal, paving, supervision, planning and operation of municipal services. Sanitation engineers are always in demand by state and national public health service.

Among the University's prominent civil engineering alumni are the following:

Kenneth W. Markwell, '20eng, assistant commissioner of reclamation, Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.; John J. Bollinger, Jr., '25bs, of Bollinger Construction Company, Oklahoma City, contractors for the construction of the new O. U. Press Building; J. Ray Matlock, '25bs, director of the University School of Civil Engineering; John C. Simonson, '30bs, chief engineer of Robberson Steel Company, Oklahoma City, and William Simpson, '36bs, director of the School of Aeronautical Engineering, University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas.

The school's active student-professional organization is the American Society of Civil Engineers.

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING

The School of Electrical Engineering, headed by Frank G. Tappan, offers two options to its majors—electronics and communications, or electrical power.

At the end of the first semester of the junior year, each student indicates a preference between the two options and his course of study is then directed accordingly. Prior to this time subjects required of both sections are studied.

Two social organizations are available exclusively for electrical engineering majors. One of these, a student branch of the National American Institute of Electrical Engineers, is under the faculty supervision of Clyde L. Farrar, professor of electrical engineering. Organized on the campus in 1912, the local chapter devotes its monthly meetings to discussions on electrical engineering topics. Outside speakers are usually invited to these functions.

Annually in May, the Oklahoma City section of the institute is invited to attend a meeting. At this dinner meeting the students give the program which consists of talks and papers written on special research and equipment. The Oklahoma City section chooses the best three papers presented and award prizes. John C. Reiff, of Stillwater, senior in engineering, is current student president of the organization.

The other social organization is Eta Kappa Nu, a national Electrical Engineering society, headed locally by student president Clarence R. Gates, junior in engineering of Tulsa. Professor Tappan is faculty sponsor.

Both juniors and seniors are eligible for membership in the fraternity, but membership is limited to two and one-half times the square root of the number of juniors in the class at the end of the first month of the semester.

Three outstanding alumni of the School of Electrical Engineering are R. D. Evans, '14eng, '26eng; Lloyd J. Hibbard, '14eng, and Verne E. Alden, '11eng.

Evans is now a consulting transmission engineer for Westinghouse Electric Corp. He is noted for having been co-author with C. F. Wagner in writing the first book on symmetrical components. This book is used as a text in the Engineering School.

Lloyd J. Hibbard is vice-president of Westinghouse Electric Corp., in charge of railway electrification development.

Verne E. Alden, noted for work which effected economy in the manufacture of transformers while an employee of the Westinghouse Corporation, is now vice-president of Ulen and Company and is in charge of that company's Chicago, Illinois, office.

SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE

The University of Oklahoma School of Architecture was listed among the ten most progressive schools in the nation recently by the architectural journal, Progressive Architecture. But receiving national recognition is nothing new to the O. U. school, which is a regular winner of awards given by the Beaux Arts Institute of Designs, to which the best architecture schools in the country belong.

The most recent O. U. winner was Otha Wolf, fourth-year student from Oklahoma City, whose designs of a meteorological station took top honors.

Chairman of the three-man committee which directs affairs of the school is Richard Kuhlman, assistant professor. Other committee members are Henry L. Kamphoefner, professor and Joe E. Smay, professor.

The school is located on the North Base. In the building which houses the drawing rooms, lecture rooms and offices are taught the basic courses, architectural design and construction, history, and electrification.

The high rank of the school is recognized throughout the nation, and a large number of the 208 major students are from out of state—from the eastern and western extremities of the United States. The heavy influx of veterans has doubled enrollment this semester over spring, 1946. Only 15 women majors are listed on class rolls.

The Architecture School is proud of a host of graduates who have made names for themselves in the professional world. A well-known Oklahoma alum is Joe M. Boaz, '40bs, Oklahoma City, whose work is respected throughout the nation. A '44bs grad is Dale C. Byrd, who is ace designer with Skidmore, Owings and Merrill, New York City. John Black, '42bs, and Charles B. Genter, '39bs, are partners of Pace Associates, large Chicago architecture firm, with which John Lattimore, high-ranking graduate of 1946, is associated. Two other outstanding former students, Cecil D. Elliott, '44bs, and Bruce Miller, '38bs, are O. U. faculty members.
