LIEUTENANT MCCOOL, '41ba

Lt. McCool Is Aid to Admiral At New Orleans Headquarters

Lt. (j.g.) Richard M. McCool, Jr., '41ba, United States Navy, holder of the Congressional Medal of Honor, has reported to headquarters of the Eighth Naval District for duty as aide to the commandant, the Navy has announced.

Lieutenant McCool will serve as aide to Rear Adm. A. S. Merrill and is expected to remain as aide to Rear Adm. Lawrence F. Reifsnider, who will relieve Admiral Merrill upon his retirement early in September.

A graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy in 1944, Lieutenant McCool reports to New Orleans from duty as gunnery officer of the destroyer McKean of the Pacific fleet. A native of Norman, he graduated from the University before entering the Naval Academy.

The Congressional Medal of Honor, the nation's highest recognition of valor, was awarded Lieutenant McCool by President Truman for his heroic conduct during a Jap kamikaze attack off Okinawa in June, 1945. After evacuating all hands from a sinking destroyer the craft under Lieutenant McCool's command, was attacked simultaneously by two suicide planes. One of the attackers was downed, but the other crashed close to the conning tower. Although badly burned and wounded by shrapnel, Lieutenant McCool rallied his concussion-shocked crew, went into burning compartments to carry out survivors, and saved his ship. He was subsequently evacuated on a stretcher and spent many months in Navy hospitals.

Lieutenant McCool, his wife, the former Elaine Larecy, '42ba, (former editor of the Sooner Magazine), Norman, and daughter, Carolyn, will reside in quarters at the Naval Station in New Orleans.

Who's Who

youth's face and read the future. Neither does the aptitude test discover the latent spark in the timid soul. Often dreams of accomplishment are carefully concealed and talents remain undiscovered.

"The medical students' teachers with four years of intimate contact find appraisal difficult. Even though they make discoveries which seem to warrant prophecies, often their judgment is in error. Two hundred years ago Oliver Goldsmith and Edmund Burke were fellow students at Trinity College. Goldsmith was a 'sizar,' performing menial tasks in return for board and instruction. Even from the wisest of his teachers there was no echo of his real merit. At Elphinstone, Athlone and Edgeworthstone he had been considered 'heavy, dull, and obtuse.' But in spite of this scholastic record he was destined to sit with Burke at the club tables in London and to attract to his own table the great Dr. Samuel Johnson.

"While he worked his way through school without distinction, some undiscovered force concealed by his obtuse personality was working toward his immortal achievements. When he died Burke 'burst into tears.' Johnson wrote 'he was a very great man,' and Reynolds 'put aside painting for the day.'

"Oklahoma's present needs in the field of medicine including research offer unusual opportunities for the young medical graduate. Patiently teachers and friends shall await the verdict. Only time can tell Who's Who. Oklahomans expect the members of the medical class of 1947 to glorify their Alma Mater and to cast a mellow light over Oklahoma medicine. William Osler has said, 'Life is a straight, plain business, and the way is clear, blazed for you by generations of strong men, into whose labors you enter and whose ideals must be your inspiration. In my mind's eye I can see you twenty years hence—resolute-eyed, broad-headed, smooth-faced men who are in the world to make a success of life. . . .' This is what your young university and your relatively new state needs. It's to be hoped that the twenty-year record will bring a high average and that each member of the class will win a high place in his profession, thus making it difficult to determine Who's Who."
