WILLIAM J. SIMPSON

Tobacco Juice Taboo 20 Years Ago

Long suffering Fine Arts Dean Fredrik Holmberg finally achieved a victory late in 1929. After having protested in vain against the quaint student practice of spitting tobacco juice on the University auditorium floor, University officials finally heeded his plea. Pep meetings were moved from the auditorium to the field house.

The student newspaper, The Oklahoma Daily, in reporting a fire in March, 1929, revealed the utter break down of the Christian religion. Said the Daily: "The house and household gods were completely destroyed." Buddha too?

A Mouth Washing Ordered

15 Years Ago

The troubles and tribulations of a librarian are unlimited. Take for example J. J. Hill, '15ba, assistant librarian. He had to warn University students to stop using candy for book marks under the threat of making them "eat it." Love notes, bobby pins, old pencils, combs and dainty feminine handkerchiefs, he said, were not so bad—but candy, never.

Those rascals, the Ruf Neks and the Jazz Hounds, were disbanded late in the football season for giving an "objectionable" yell. After dutifully washing their mouths out with soap, they were allowed to reorganize with faculty supervision.

Readers of the Sooner Magazine who were suffering from wanderlust had ample opportunity to satisfy that desire and at an amazing low cost. Advertisements offered a one way cruise to Europe for $113, an Orient cruise for $240 and a first class, round the world cruise for $654.

A visting professor on the campus, Dr. Ray Immel of the University of Southern California, caused quite a scholarly furor among the University faculty. He said in no uncertain terms that he considered the teaching of Greek and Latin a waste of time. Poking fun at the classics, Dr. Immel said Greek probably had one use: "It enables one to decipher the symbols on fraternity houses."

He was promptly challenged by President W. B. Bizzell, Dr. Samuel W. Reaves, dean of the college of arts and sciences; Dr. Roy Gittinger, dean of administration, and Dr. O. W. Reinmuth, head of the University's department of classical languages. However, Dr. Immel found many students to defend his arguments.
