Engineers Amend Rules

15 Years Ago

Engineering students amended their constitution to take care of queens that had a habit of being "abducted" just before St. Pat's Day. Their constitution stated that future queens who got kidnapped by lawyers would forfeit their right to the St. Pat's Day Throne. And they decided that women students in engineering were no longer eligible for the queenship.

In the Sooner Yearbook, the editor just couldn't restrain himself from throwing a few good-natured barbs at the fraternities and sororities on the campus. Of Delta Delta Delta sorority he said, "Tri Dels realizing their outstanding tonnage, diet yesterday, diet tomorrow, but never diet today. Here's for bigger and better Tri Dels." The Phi Mu's were not too flatteringly described as "The sorority of Phi Beta Kappas and old maids. A little May-Pole dancing to attract the ATO's might help, girls."

Even the press was not sacred to the Yearbook editor. He reported an incident at the campus corner that went like this:

"Officer, come quickly, I've just run over an ex-Oklahoma Daily Editor!"

"Sorry, lady, but today's Sunday and you can't collect your bounty until tomorrow morning."

And the omnipresent Ruf-Neks were said to be "The tough guys, he men and such. Make their pledges grow whiskers to prove their virility. . . . Make annual pilgrimage to Dallas.
