Back to Washington

When Major General Wilton B. Persons, usually referred to as Ike's White House man "Friday," decided he needed an assistant seasoned in the field of Congressional operations and legislation, he looked for Bryce Harlow, '36ba.

Harlow, a veteran of 10 years in Washington, had resigned from his chief clerk assignment with the House Armed Services Committee in 1951 and returned to his father's publishing business in Oklahoma City.

While an Army Reserve lieutenant colonel, Harlow established a highly efficient record and favorable impression upon Congressmen during his tour as a staff member, assisting the Armed Services Committee.

After a talk with General Persons and after careful consideration, Bryce Harlow agreed to return to the nation's capital of axe-grinders and angles.

Entering the University of Oklahoma in 1936 at the age of 15, Harlow made Phi Beta Kappa and captained the tennis team. After graduation, he enrolled in the graduate school of the University of Texas and studied for a master's degree in Political Science.

Stepping onto the Washington merry-go-round in 1938 as assistant librarian for the House of Representatives, he became Secretary to the Hon. Wesley E. Disney, then an Oklahoma congressman.

Called to active duty in 1941, he was assigned to General Marshall's immediate office to help create a classified message center. He served as the official recorder at the Inter-Allied Conference where plans were formulated for the invasion of North Africa.

Awarded the Legion of Merit and the Secretary of War Commendation Ribbon, he was released to inactive duty in 1946. He returned to Washington a year later to assume his duties with the House Armed Services Committee.

While in this position he broke down technical documents into components to facilitate the layman's understanding of them.

It is generally conceded on Capitol Hill, that no one is more thoroughly familiar with the subtle intricacies of Armed Service Legislation than Bryce Harlow.
