McIVER-SHORNEY: Miss Margo Kay McIver,

Ode to Class of '29

As our reunion time draws near
It brings me thoughts of yesteryear,
I wish that I were young once more
Back in those days when co-eds wore
No sweaters, skirts or bobby sox
But went to class in party frocks,
Their coats clutched tightly at the side
And high heels clicking with each stride.
When girls who smoked were much more shocking
Than those who wore a rolled down stocking,
'Twas strange there always was a breeze
To whip their skirts above their knees
While lawyers justified their "reps"
By whistling from the law barn steps.
Those were the days D D M C
Created many a mystery,
And those who broke the no-car rule
Might find themselves kicked out of school.
The rules were mostly "Thou shalt nots"
And students hid from O. B. Grotts.
It seems it's hardly been a day
And yet my hair is getting grey,
The campus hasn't changed so much
Except for classrooms, dorms and such,
The styles today are much in line
With what we wore in '29,
What puzzles me I must acknowledge
Is why these children are in college?
They are not prodigies I'm told
So it must be I am getting old.
The years pass quicker than a wink,
It's always later than I think.
As our reunion date approaches
I am amazed how time encroaches,
25 means Silver and within our ranks
Some have silver piled in banks
While others' pocketbooks are bare,
Their only silver in their hair.
But if I've gained some worthwhile knowledge
In all the years since I left college,
It is that everyone needs friends
And friendship pays big dividends.
So let's all plan to meet and dine
With friends we knew in '29.

Mother of the Year

Oklahoma's Mother of the Year is energetic Mrs. Clyde M. Becker, 66, grey-haired, peppery, who has lived more than most people would in three lifetimes. Her years have seen her from Iowa plains to China floods, from Colorado mining towns to camps in the New Mexican mountains. A widow since 1938, she has seen all her six sons through the University.

Now living quietly in Chickasha, devoting much of her time to civic work, Mrs. Becker was born in Iowa in 1888. When she was six, her father, a minister, packed up the family and sailed with them to China.

There the family lived in a rock cabin, a house that flooded at every heavy rain. After six years, with a rebellion shortly before the turn of the century, the family was shipped home. At 12, Mrs. Becker entered her first American school—in the second grade. Characteristically, she made up for this lost time the next year by skipping five grades.

In high school she passed her botany course in a month, taking the final exam with the other students and scoring a 98. Mrs. Becker was 17 when her mother died of cancer, and she enrolled in what is now Oklahoma City University. After two years she decided to go into missionary work, but after graduating from college in 1911 she married Clyde M. Becker, a young geologist.

Becker's first job took them to Colorado, where they lived in a shack and where their first child was born in snow so deep that the doctor's buggy overturned four times getting there. Later, with $400, the Becker's went to New Mexico with a tent, mattress, rocking chair and a No. 2 stove. After a while their money was gone; they moved to town where Becker did odd jobs until entering World War I as a second lieutenant.

The war past, he returned to geology, but over the years he re-invested much of their money in "dry holes or royalty." When he died 16 years ago, there wasn't much left for the family. Sons ranged from 10 to 24 years of age.

Asked how she made out during this rugged period, Mrs. Becker declared, "Oh, ends always met, but it was mighty tough at times for the first couple of years." Ends met somehow, because all of her sons achieved degrees at O.U., and it was for their care she received the honor of outstanding mother.

All have geology degrees, although the oldest, Fred, '35geol, '46med, is a physician at Altus, having entered medical school after his father's death. The five who are geologists are Robert, '43geol, Ardmore; Theodore, '43geol, Wichita Falls; twins Phillip, '49geol, and Donald, '49geol, of Midland, Texas, and Billings, Montana, and Clyde, '51geol, Oklahoma City.

Besides her life as a mother, Mrs. Becker works with the Red Cross, American Cancer Society, Girl Scouts (of which she is training chairman at Chickasha and leader of two troops), Parent-Teacher Associations, Chickasha Youth Program, Methodist Church and American Legion Auxiliary.

Aims of Education—Student Views

sible avenue for the acquisition of knowledge and the training of the intellect of the intellectually outstanding; to prevent the tragic and wasteful retarding of intellectual growth; to encourage the highest possible development of each person in accordance with his innate intelligence.

Every educator knows that it is extremely difficult to avoid striking an average in teaching which bores the above-average and puzzles the below-average student. This is the trap in state education. However, I believe the place where that danger most needs combatting is in the grade and high schools. Little can or need be done in institutions of higher learning.

Certainly, it must be conceded that the average and below-average student is never hurt by being exposed to college work. Decidedly to the contrary, he is at least touched to some degree by problems, both personal and otherwise, and has to evolve some kind of answers. He learns something of his duties to himself and to society and acquires an ability to live with others through compromise.

He must realize that there are very few definite answers; that most things are gray instead of black or white. Mere exposure alone to college training knocks off the rough edges of self-righteousness, bigotry and conceit. And not the least of the benefits derived from higher education is the skill he acquires enabling him to become a self-sustaining and productive member of society.

What about the above-average student and higher education? I believe he is adequately served. A student cannot be stuffed with education like a fattening goose is stuffed with corn. Education is an individual process; it is learning rather than teaching, a searching after knowledge. State higher education should not attempt to force a student to his zenith; indeed, it cannot do so. Only the means of scaling the heights, plus the encouragement to do so, can be furnished by the state.

It is said that a fattening hog will mix his own ration, and mix it accurately ac-
