Spotters, cue men, and caption writers are essential for radio and television broadcasters as well as photographers, movie and newsreel crews. We must obtain someone who can recognize and preferably has memorized the numbers and positions of all players and who is familiar with the team's plays and offense. Freshman football players, a recent letterman, or an injured member of the football squad are preferred. Twenty-five spotters were required for the Notre Dame game. The final list included track stars, baseball players, a swimmer, and several Norman high school football players.

One hour before the kickoff, our Belfry of Bedlam was packed and jammed but the elevator still labored incessantly from floor to floor. A thousand people seemed to be asking questions.

"Where can we get another typewriter?"

"Am I supposed to type with this thing on my lap?"

"Please find our spotter and tell him to report to the roof. If you don't locate him in five minutes, can you get someone else up here in a hurry?"

"Hey, where's the telephone man? This teletype's gone haywire!"

"What's the temperature and wind velocity now?"

"What's the estimated crowd here today?"

The phone buzzed constantly. Even though the stands were not yet filled nor the stadium public address turned on, every town in Oklahoma seemed to have an emergency to report. Notes flowed up the elevator pipeline from working newsmen who had forgotten or lost their passes and
