A Student Views Dallas

By LARRY LEVIEUX, '55

THE TENSION began to mount Wednesday before the Dallas game. The biggest concern of students was, "Will Professor Snarf give us a free cut Friday?" The biggest complaint was, "Oh, no! Not a quiz Monday." By Friday morning the campus was astir. Cars were gaudily painted with red "Beat Texas" signs, and were sporting red and white streamers.

By 10 o'clock the traffic had hit weary U. S. 77, south. The convoy increased in size throughout the afternoon, and covered the 200 miles to Dallas as quickly as four wheels and an engine could get there.

Like ants at a picnic, the football fans swarmed over Dallas. They were everywhere; in the streets, in hotels, restaurants, night clubs and private homes. As a senior I had seen the football festival several times. There was no change from the previous years except that the crowd was bigger, the noise louder, the confusion greater—and the football better! These superlatives seem to fit every year.

The usual crowd packed around the Baker and Adolphus hotels. Hundreds of cars streamed past, all filled with students screaming like banshees. In the Sooner rally around the Adolphus, red and white banners and badges were present in profusion. As soon as a large crowd had gathered, the cheerleaders led the rooting for Big Red . . . The students yelled their young lungs out. Nearby, the Texans competed for the distinction of making the loudest racket. It was impossible to tell who won.

The fans soon tired of whistle-rahs and yeah-teams and broke up to roam the streets. The downtown hotels soon filled with the throng, from the lobby to the top floor. A group of Texans started a "Beat O. U." chant, and were immediately drowned in a chorus of "We're Number One, Hey!"

The local nightclubs were full of pleasure-seekers. Smooth dance music was swamped in a deluge of "Boomer Sooner." No class worries were apparent here. The entire campus had migrated to Dallas for a weekend of complete, unrestrained good times.

The city was like a deserted ballroom Saturday morning. The merry-making which had rocked the town the night before was tucked in bed. The Dallas police took a brief rest. By mid-morning the streets were again crowded, but quieter. The game had now taken a more serious aspect. "What are the odds now?" was the question of the day. The exuberant over-confidence of the night before was gone, and partisans of both sides were worrying about the success of their respective teams.

By noon the football crowd had begun to head toward Fair Park. The Texas State Fair, world-famous, opened its gates and welcomed the largest number of people ever to see a football game in the southwest, 76,204, to the Cotton Bowl. Soon the stadium was packed and steaming in the warm autumn sun.

The Texas-O. U. game was its usual hysterical self—always an exciting contest between two evenly-matched teams. The Sooners were again successful. Their power and speed were too much for the Texans to the tune of a 14-7 score. With 30 seconds until the final gun indicated on the scoreboard clock, a group of young, rabid Sooner fans pulled down the wooden goalposts. If one of the last two Texas pass plays had been completed for a touchdown, making the score 14-13, the referee would have been in a touchy situation. The game was over and the two groups, one very happy and one very sad, began to file slowly out of the stadium and out of the fairgrounds.

The noise and tension had subsided. The Oklahomans were satisfied with the performance of their team and were willing to let the Texans off without too much ribbing. After all, Texas had lost six of the last seven of these yearly spectacles. However, I didn't detect too much sympathy among the bet collectors going the rounds of their buddies.

By Sunday night, all was quiet again on the home front. The students had returned to Norman, big heads and all, and were preparing their little minds for that never-ending class Monday morning. An abortive attempt was made to pressure President Cross into allowing a holiday for winning the game, but a threat to cancel other holidays promptly squelched that. Resigned to their fate, the disappointed students returned to their residences. "Dallas" was over again—and the campus was glad of it. But you heard the same comment from everywhere, "Wait till next year." (The Frederick was represented by Howard McBee, '40ba, '41Law, and Mrs. McBee, and Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Tomlinson. It was old home week for the alumni from Purcell who gathered around to visit with James Kennedy, '39bs, '41med, and Louis Kennedy, '34bs, '36med, and their wives. The two Kennedy boys are now leading doctors in Colorado Springs.

Typical of the fans from the mountain states were Thelton "Sonny" Wright, '48pharm, former O.U. footballer, and his wife, who now live at Albuquerque and were in Boulder to see the Sooners play for the first time in two years. Sonny has developed in the few years that he has been out of school from a fine football player to an outstanding Oklahoma supporter. He arrived about one hour early at the stadium and by the time the teams had completed their warming up exercises he was so restless and excited that it looked for a while as though someone would have to administer a sedative to keep him from suiting up.

The game was soon underway and everyone settled down to concentrate on beating another well-coached, fired-up opponent. The Sooner partisans, wherever you find them, are as fiercely loyal and confident of victory as the players on the Big Red squad themselves.
