

Henry Weddle, cashier, Jerry Mustain, vice president, both of Lawton's Security Bank & Trust Co., attended study conference for bankers at O.U. in September, discussed banking developments with other Sooner bankers.

Lt. C. T. Raley, in charge of District 4 of the Oklahoma Highway Patrol in Lawton, received initial training at O.U. Patrol Training School in '37. He has served as an instructor in subsequent Patrol schools at the University.

The author tells how the University of Oklahoma through her Extension Division is providing educational services to an Oklahoma city. It might have been your town except for different names and faces; a significant account of how the University of Oklahoma serves the state.

Mrs. Velma Nelson, Lawton Beauty School owner, picked up tips on feminine beauty fashions at one-week Cosmetology Short Course on O.U. campus. Here she confides in a young Lawtonian who seems somewhat disinterested in high fashion.

Bill Dixon, chief staff photographer of the Lawton Constitution-Press, attended a Photo-Journalism short course at O.U. in October, saw latest methods of shooting and processing news photos.

Lawton P-TA members find information presented by the O.U. Family Life Institute helpful. Mrs. F. M. Whitaker, Mrs. V. M. Wallace and Mrs. Leroy Botkin watch the Institute's television program. Extension Division services use all available means of communication to provide educational material.

University attempts to serve educational needs of state citizens, regardless of age or location.

EVERY Oklahoma citizen is a potential student at the University of Oklahoma. Through the Extension Division of the University, the facilities of the O.U. campus can be used by any state group or individual.

"Education beyond the campus" is the slogan of the division. Under the direction of Dean Thurman White, the division has expanded its services into more than 700 state towns and cities.

"We realize the duty the University of Oklahoma owes to every state citizen," Dean White says. "We meet this duty through the mail services and radio broadcasts. Traveling on the highway and in the air, the OU faculty goes to the people of Oklahoma in cities, towns, villages, and country schoolhouses."

For the University of Oklahoma belongs to the citizens of Lawton and every Oklahoma community. The reserve of cultural and technical knowledge stored at O.U. is always available through the state-wide campus of the Extension Division.

And, though the University feels the responsibility, it can only offer its services to cities and communities and individuals that request them. If you think you or your community can well be served by University facilities, a letter to the Dean of the Extension Division, University of Oklahoma, will bring results.

Mrs. Mary Jane Colwell is a public health nurse in Lawton. Since she is expected to give rapid aid in case of disaster, she attended the Civil Defense Disaster Institute at O.U. She is shown preparing to answer a call.
