Search for Purpose

By PERRY ROBINSON, '57

IT'S A STRANGE CONDITION, this lack of purpose that grips so many college students today. Purpose is the highest achievement of all, for with a recognized intent, man may take advantage of his abilities and skills to prosecute and obtain, achieving "peace of mind," and "security," and "happiness," all of which we talk and read and hear about but never seem to experience except in some fleeting form.

A senior at O.U. is surrounded by brilliant individuals, both in the teaching ranks and in his own element, the student body. He may pick from a thousand and one courses; he may choose any one of hundreds of vocations. Finally, he chooses, and he studies and "sweats" tests. He makes grades and his folks are proud and smile benignly when he comes home. They display his finely-clothed body and his stock of clever sayings, expertly shaped by psychology and philosophy courses, to relatives and friends.

He progresses satisfactorily, and in four years he is approaching graduation. And then, the present, which always before has been secure in academic progress and the parental pocketbook, is now, and it is time for him to decide how and what he is to do when he receives the piece of paper that says he has a college education. Suddenly, the reality of adulthood stares him in the eye. And then he asks himself, "What do I want to do?" and then perhaps, "What do I want out of life?" and "Will I be happy doing that?" This agony of self-analysis is more than he can bear, for he realizes, perhaps, that he really doesn't know what he wants.

This happens to someone every day at the University of Oklahoma.

More frightening than physical pain is the gnawing urge for something indefinable. College men and women are not always the blithe, sophisticated products they seem to be. In many cases, their attitude and posturing is a shield thrown up to cover the fear that people will recognize that they have little faith in anything, including themselves. And when the shell cracks, a relentless honesty comes pouring out.

The question goes much deeper than the choice of an occupation. One must carefully discern between cause and effect. Random questioning reveals that most students are searching for security. Yet, the majority fail to examine why they want security and what will ultimately bring security.

There are no ominous overtones to the student's lack of intent. Each person must find himself before he "finds" anything else. At times, it appears that the average student regards thinking about such personal abstractions a waste of time, a weakness, a condition to be stifled before it has a chance to break the happy sequence of each day on the campus. But one wonders, when students are alone at night, unable to stem thought, whether they place personal motives before the glare of honest examination.

Students have a horror of being referred to as "fouled up" or the stronger, "really fouled up." For when a person reveals a chink in the armor of blase, party-going sophistication he has built, he is in imminent danger of being described by his fellow students as "fouled up." Perhaps, the choice of a vocation is but a shallow indication of the real indecision that lies beneath. But it is an outward indication, one that can be seen on the puzzled faces of enrolling students.

Today's college student lives at a pace that defies normalcy. Convention is not a word but a wall. When everyone buys pants with buckles on the back or flat, golf-type hats just because someone got it started, then convention is a real discipline.

Beset by the fast pace of modern living, a world of specialists, the unsettled international situation, economic pressure and a world where success is mandatory, the modern collegiate tends to dismiss all with an airy wave of the hand and attempt to forget. But he can't forget, because he knows then that the pressures are destroying his ability to understand himself.

All this and more, and young men and women will continue to graduate and live happily ever after, in vine-covered cottages or condemned tenements, whichever is their destiny. And a new generation will undergo the vagaries of maturation.

"Saturday's no fun anymore"

IT sure used to be, though. Up early—even before the sun hit the window sill. Then tip-toe into Dad's room to wake him up. Sometimes it isn't easy.

He's up now. Careful not to wake Mom. Now you're dressed and in the kitchen where you and Dad whip up a swell breakfast together. Doesn't the coffee smell good? And the bacon frying . . . the hot rolls. A real man's breakfast.

"What'll it be today, Tommy?" Dad asks. "Want to toss a ball around? How about a ride out to Blue Lake? Bet the trout are jumping. You call the shots, son. It's your day."

That's the way it was. The way you thought it would always be. You're not supposed to cry because you're a big guy now. But when you ask "why" no one knows how to answer you. What's cancer anyway? Why did it take Dad away?

For little lads like Tommy—with fun in their hearts and a glove in their hands—cancer deals a cruel blow. Today, because of cancer, there are more than 160,000 children who have to learn to live without a father.

Yet there is hope. Hope for a final, certain cure for cancer. The men and women in our research laboratories are working night and day toward this end. But they need your help. Badly.

There has never been enough money to carry on all the research that needs to be done. Can you afford to remain indifferent to this enemy that strikes 1 out of every 4 Americans?

We need your support. Give generously.
