1900-20

Dear Editor: You doubtless knew Frank M. Long, a graduate of the Class of 1908 (also M.A. in 1909), a man who stood high in scholarship; who made letters in football, track, and I don't know what else, for several years while at O.U. A man who pressed wrinkles out of pants to make his way through the University—in fact, I think he probably gave the first pressing that they ever had to pants of a number of students on O.U.'s campus. He was a great leader in the Y.M.C.A. and other student activities.

Frank Long spent 17 years at Porto Alegre, Brazil, where he built the Y.M.C.A., trained the staff that carried on after he dedicated the building and left. Frank reached many young men through his up and tell them that I have taken good care of her."

"Funny thing, too, they expected to see me old and decrepit, since I was, to them, an old man when we left. I was just past 50. The only change in looks from then is a little hair growing on my upper lip. Bigode they call it. We call it a mustache.

"I was interviewed by two papers and picture came out in both. The picture was very poor, no one could see what I looked like, but my name was with it, and they knew how I looked long ago, and when seen by friends on the street they knew me. Boys then, are men now; girls then, are women now. They knew me, and I had a hard time to recognize them for there were so many of them never heard such an eloquent speech as I had just made.

"When the Y.M.C.A. gave us a luncheon, Eula Lee said, 'You had better take enough handkerchiefs with you . . ." But I didn't cry there. All the speeches treated of some athletic thing I had done, or some funny thing, none of the real spiritual values, so there was nothing to cry about. It was real refreshing to visit the city where we lived and worked for 17 years, and where we left a city full of friends, even a State full, for we were helping over the State in many ways, Eula Lee writing a weekly column for one of the best daily papers. and her book Corocoes Felizes was published there the first edition. (It's in its seventh now, published here in Sao Paulo, after the first.) In my athletic work, introducing track and field events, basketball, volleyball, ring tennis, etc., I was known as "The father of athletics in the State." Now volleyball, basketball and even ring tennis are wellknown. The two first are rivals for the National sport of Association football."

There are probably few graduates of the University of Oklahoma who have had as great an influence for good and worthwhile living upon those with whom they came in contact.—Errett R. Newby, '07mus, '08ba, Oklahoma City.

Clyde Bogle, '02ba, Norman, is now in semiretirement, having retired from his dairy business some time ago to devote more attention to his business holdings. Bogle played football for the Sooners from 1899 until 1903.

ability in athletics. He called them in off the streets and taught them the importance of good health, sanitation, and care of their bodies, and at the same time gave them some spiritual inspiration and better judgment in valuing the worthwhile things of life.

After Frank returned to the United States from Brazil, he was an official in the Y.M.C.A. in Roanoke, Virginia. Later he came to Norman, where he and his wife were managers of a student apartment building.

I have just received a letter from him, from which I quote. I thought probably you would like to use all or part of it in the Sooner Magazine:

"I am able to carry on fairly well in Portuguese after the 22 years away. But Eula Lee (Mrs. Long) seems not to have forgotten a word, at least she has one to substitute for one she may not remember at the minute. Everyone is amazed at her ready Portuguese and how young and pretty she is. I swell and only one of me. Sometimes I guessed right, but many times I had to simply tell them that I did not know.

" 'Don't you remember coming to see me when I was sick . . . ?' 'Don't you remember helping my father when he got drunk . . . ?' 'Don't you remember giving me the method for making . . . or doing . . . ?' People remembered so many little things we did for them, all in the day's work and forgotten about, that it was amazing to us. When they were not able to see us, they called by phone. One man called by phone, explained that I had helped his dad when he was a drunkard, and had helped him as a boy. And when he told me his name, I only remembered after a few hours. A man at Rotary got up and almost cried when he told them what I had been and meant to him as a young man. Another man sitting near had tears rolling down his cheeks when I got up to try and thank him, and I choked up and had to sit down without saying a word. The main speaker later said he had from brain surgery which he underwent in March. A nationally prominent geologist, Wood was 69. Wood, whose father, Dr. V. A. Wood, made the 1889 and Cherokee Strip runs into Oklahoma territory, was born at Wallaceburg, Arkansas, and reared in Enid. He was the eldest of nine brothers and sisters, all of whom graduated from the University. At the latest count, his family numbered 32 graduates of the University. As a football player at O.U., Wood was said to have performed a feat never duplicated. He took a punt on his 2-yard line and ran 108 yards for a touchdown. At the time, the playing field was 110 yards long. The following year it was reduced to 100. Wood was active in numerous civic and professional organizations. Student Report Card

Portrait of Jenny

By PERRY ROBINSON, '57

Undoubtedly the most-talked about but the least understood of all college personalities is the campus queen. Under the sophisticated veneer a surprisingly intelligent and likeable person may appear if brought to life by the stimulus of personal acquaintance.

Such is the case with O.U.'s Jenny Lou Grimmet. The dark-eyed young woman is an Air Force ROTC honorary cadet colonel, Engineers' Queen, Quadrangle Queen, and currently a finalist for the Miss O.U. crown. She has not let the heady wine of popularity dispel the friendly charm she brought with her as a freshman.

Rather than a harmful effect, Jenny Lou thinks being one of the campus queens has made her a better person. Being by nature a person who is careful not to hurt others' feelings, she has found it necessary to be doubly careful after winning the contests. She knows that university society expects to see a popular figure tainted by conceit. The self-discipline she has maintained to defeat this thought has in turn made her even more considerate.

A bit of a non-conformist, Jenny Lou does not like to be governed completely by what other people think. Although she enjoys the approval of others, she is constantly striving to make her own decisions and not let the weight of society's opinion become the dominant factor.

For a glamorous campus figure, Jenny Lou's outlook on her future is remarkably simple. She asks nothing in particular from life and is the rare type who enjoys so many of the little things that the majority ignore in their search for money or adventure, or whatever they consider their "goal."

Jenny Lou worries some about the idea of inhabiting a pedestal, however symbolic it is. At times her naivete and modesty make her completely incapable of understanding why hundreds of people have, at one time or another, selected her as an ideal. Perhaps this is why the pressure of public acclaim has not been powerful enough to mold her in the same cast as many popular college girls, who sweep majestically around the collegiate scene, their halo visible only to themselves.

She is not the only campus queen on the O.U. scene. But the restraint and good taste with which she has accepted her success in university society is equalled by very few. She appears to be the embodiment of the girl-in-the-little-white-cottage, and in this lies one of the reasons for her popularity.

How has Jenny Lou become the epitome of the white-cottage type? No one knows, including herself. But the one powerful influence in her life could offer a most important clue. That influence is her religious faith.

Jenny Lou's belief in Christianity governs her behavior and guides her personality. She believes that religion and happiness are irrevocably dependent on each other and that one is not possible without the other. She is sure that her faith has made her the person she is, and that all the good she is has come as a result of her faith.

But she is broad-minded about such important questions as religion, and evinces a definite admiration for those who have the courage to have a different belief, providing they are sincere. However, she has no desire to explore the more profound questions of our existence and is content in the security of her faith. She feels that those individuals who lose their contact with reality while pondering the infinite questions of philosophy and theology are wasting their time and should find a more concrete faith with which to concern themselves.

Even with the presence of her faith and morality, she still has the hint of mystery that makes a woman fascinating. Likeable as home-made ice cream and as sincere as the parish priest, her beauty is not skin deep, but the kind that permeates her being. For this reason a word portrait of Jenny is difficult; paper is not the proper canvas to record such elusive qualities.

But the student body can see and does not have to depend on the printed word. And they have chosen well in selecting Jenny Lou to grace their mythical thrones. Okmulgee, her home town. She was the wife of Neil Bacon.
