

ROLL CALL

of Alumni Newsmakers

GOLDEN DAYS—Photographs from the Roy E. Heffner Collection: There's no doubt who the short man is with the comical hat (see "Wonderful Ted" on the opposite page), but who is the athlete with the big letter and the bigger smile? If you know, won't you drop us a line?

Initiate Alex McCoy

"--and now a jolly song or two!"

Phi Delta, (boom) Phi Delta The-a-tal

Alex McCoy, '40geol, the boy who didn't look at the birdie in last month's Roy E. Heffner photograph, was an easy person for alumni to recognize. His weariness should be easy to recognize also: he had just been through a lengthy initiation ceremony with his Phi Delta Theta pledge class, and he was facing a jolly round of frat songs.

The pose Heffner caught in his formal (except for McCoy) picture is evidently a unique one of Tulsa's busy Mr. McCoy. In 1953, after a spectacular rise in the geology divisions of Carter, Phillips and Gulf oil companies, McCoy organized McCoy Associates, Inc., his own company, now employing 40 geologists and engineers, and serving customers throughout the world.

When he is not flying to company offices in Casper, Calgary, or Denver, McCoy attempts to work in a little golfing and fishing. But these attempts understandably have to take second place to a home life involving his wife, Shirley (a University of Southern California graduate) and eight children: five girls and three prospective Phi Deltas.

Can you recognize the letterman in this month's Roy E. Heffner photograph (see Page 21)?
