

ROLL CALL of Alumni Newsmakers

GOLDEN DAYS—Photographs from the Roy E. Heffner Collection: Judging from the shoes, this Heffner subject was either a track man or a baseball player. Certainly he liked to smile and wear white clothes. Can you help us identify him? (See next page for Carmen identis.)

JULY, 1959

OLE! Cast in the Sooner's April issue revival of the 1935 University production of Carmen are, left to right: "Don Jose" David W. Gish, '37fa, furniture dealer, Frederick; "Zuniga" Trimble Latting, '37ba, '39Law, investment attorney, Oklahoma City; "Frasquita" Mrs. Henry C. (Ann Durand) Hughes, '35bfa, Hobart; "Carmen" Mrs. Stanford (Miriam Dearth) Mosk, '32bfa, '36m, Santa Monica, California; "Soldier" Frank Ashby, '36, store manager, Oklahoma City; "Mercedes" Mrs. Henry S. (Joyce Marshall) Sandler, Evanston, Illinois; an unknown smuggler; "Escabillo" Tom Evans, Elk City; "Smuggler" Louis E. Pearson, '46bfa, social worker in Panama; and "Smuggler" Paul Irving Williams, '40, killed in the Pacific during World War II. Miriam Dearth did considerable concert work following her graduate studies, and David Gish appeared with European opera companies and later taught voice at OCU before returning to Frederick; but most of Carmen's retinue left off singing—and smuggling!—after their memorable exercises in Holmberg Hall. Help us name this month's Roy Heffner subject if you recognize him on Page 17.

NEW BOOKS

Daredevils of the Confederate Army
by Oscar A. Kinchen, Christopher Publishing House.

LT. BENNETT YOUNG's comic opera raid on St. Albans, Vermont, is so typically Confederate that it's a pity more importance can't be attached to it. At the time, Young's mission and his trials raised more furor than the actions of any American serviceman—with the possible exception of General Sherman. Commissioned late in the war to divert Union troops from the front lines by raids from the Canadian border, Young managed only one raid—on St. Albans—and spent the rest of the war in a Canadian courtroom proving to the Canadians' satisfaction and to the Union lawyer's chagrin that holding up a few banks and burning down a few buildings in Vermont is every bit as legal when done by a Confederate as tearing down Tara in Georgia when it's done by a Yankee (excuse me—damyankee).

Little besides Yankee legal talent was diverted northward, despite the terror of the north-border folks; and Young and the sympathetic Canadians whipped that easily enough with southern-fried rhetoric. Years later, Young—the first man to raise the Confederate flag in Jassamine County, Kentucky—changed from a courtly fanatic to a businessman-author (his best known work: Confederate Wizards of the Saddle) and his demeanor became so conservative that latter-day St. Albanians invited him to speak at an anniversary ceremony. Embittered and vocal Old Guard prompted the mellowed Kentuckian to decline, however.

Oscar Kinchen's ('16ba, '20ma) chronicle of this Confederate golden boy is excellent for its scholarship, less excellent for its style—which often smacks of the hundreds of magnolia-scented books Professor Kinchen must have pored through—but even the euphemisms seem to make this amusing story more delectable.

RECOMMENDED: Civil War enthusiasts will find this a tasty morsel to help sate their 100th-anniversary appetites.

Miss Elizabeth Mary Ryan, '59, Fort Sill, and Warren H. Dunnington, '59, Norman, were married March 31 in the New Post Chapel, Fort Sill. The couple is living in Norman, where Dunnington is a senior at O.U.

SUCCESS STORY

surveying. Still, at the end of the first semester, thirty additional students had joined the original eleven in the tough curriculum, and Dean Brown reported he had received "hundreds" of inquiries about the curriculum from throughout the petroleum belt.

The curriculum was made broad and tough for a reason. Half-breeds in the oil business, landmen must be as ready to serve their companies in engineering, geological, and public relations discussions as in their most widely known function, acquiring drilling rights. Setting up a curriculum to please both these profession-conscious but broadly-trained men as well as the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business (the accrediting agency) was no simple matter.

The main bone of contention between educators and landmen when the former were approached by the latter early in 1955 was that of specialization vs. general education. The former was impossible unless a new chair could be endowed at O.U. It was also unnecessary in Dean Brown's eyes . . .

After a widely-attended extension division short course for landmen convinced landmen and educators alike that a curriculum must be agreed upon, Dean Brown presented the substance of the present curriculum to Continental landman Phil McGowan and Cal-Ray Petroleum president William Majors. McGowan was chairman of the national association's education committee, and Majors was chairman of the local organization's education committee. Both men liked what Brown proposed.

Liked is hardly the word. The support given the curriculum by these two men and their associates is nothing short of phenomenal. Three O.U. landman majors are attending classes drawing on a $2,750 scholarship fund which McGowan raised from 22 local chapters of the Association. And most impressive, six landmen have joined together in a committee to find summer training jobs for O.U. landman majors.

Toward the end of his report to the A.A.P.L. convention, Dean Brown responded to the landmen's 1958 resolution by presenting appreciation citations to McGowan and Majors for their efforts in establishing the nation's first curriculum in petroleum land management at O.U. It was an expression of what promises to be one of the most admirable of mutual admiration societies.
