Business Administration

College of Business Administration graduates represent the diversity of American business and industry from the one-man store to the sprawling manufacturing plant. From this college which has produced more than 6,000 graduates, you meet the salesman, the accountant, the merchant.

The business graduate may be your banker—Howard Bozarth, '28bus, now president of City National Bank, Oklahoma City. Bozarth spent his apprenticeship with a commercial credit company and then Dun and Bradstreet before joining City National in 1930. Starting in the bookkeeping department, he advanced to other positions and was named president in 1958. He has seen the modernization of the bank, completion of a $800,000 drive-in service and parking garage and interior renovation.

The business graduate may be your grocer—he may be Elmer Hale, Jr., '41bus, president of Hale-Halsell, wholesale grocery house. Hale manages the firm with warehouses in Durant, Tulsa and McAlester. Its territory includes part of Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri and Kansas. Hale lives in McAlester where the company roasts, grinds and packages coffee and bottles extracts and flavorings. In his home town he serves on the board of directors of the McAlester Foundation working for industrial growth of the city.

Law

The College of Law produces representatives for the bench, the state, and the people.

A graduate may return to his home town and become the family counsel. Or he may enter politics and emerge as governor of the state as J. Howard Edmondson, '48Law. Edmondson was chief prosecutor and later twice elected Tulsa county attorney before becoming the state's youngest governor by the largest majority of votes ever received by a candidate for the state's highest office. His vigorous campaign was waged on a platform of reforms in state governmental administration.

Experience in the law leads a few, such as Royce Savage, '25ba, '27Law, to the bench. Savage has been United States District Judge for the Northern District since 1940. He was in general practice before that time in Tulsa and Oklahoma City. His continuing interest in the University is shown by his active participation in the Alumni Association, serving as president in 1953-54. His court was recently the site of national interest in the unsuccessful anti-trust suit filed against 29 major oil companies charged with price-fixing during the Suez crisis.

Medicine

The School of Medicine has conferred more than 3,000 degrees in its history. From its graduates come the general practitioner tending the family illnesses, the specialist in the larger cities, the researcher seeking the cause of a fatal disease.

Typical of this number is a man named J. William Finch, '29bs, '31med, who began his practice in Sentinel after training in Vancouver (B.C.) General Hospital. Dr. Finch moved to Hobart in 1936 to go into general practice with a special interest in endocrinology. He is co-owner of the Hobart General Hospital and is associated in the Hobart Clinic.

Or a graduate may return to her hometown as did Dr. Violet Sturgeon Minton, '30ba, '31bs, '33med. After interning at Children's Hospital in San Francisco, Dr. Minton went home to Hennessey and into general practice. In a profession generally considered within the male realm, Dr. Minton has had a successful 25 years, maintaining her special interest in pediatrics. Dr. Minton is representative of the medical graduates who have continued professional study while practicing, in addition to family and civic responsibilities.

Education

W. Max
Chambers

Representatives of the College of Education are found in almost every school system in Oklahoma and in many other states. They can be found anywhere from kindergarten classrooms to college presidencies.

W. Max Chambers, '21ba, '29ms, of Central State College, Edmond, was superintendent of schools of Newkirk, Perry, Sapulpa and Okmulgee before coming to Central as president in 1949. He will retire in June after 45 years in the teaching profession. Through his 10-year tenure at Central, Chambers has met the rise in enrolment from 1,090 to 4,315 with physical expansion of facilities and curriculum improvement. Instigation and enlargement of Central's graduate program has been a prime concern during Chambers' presidency.

Another representative of the College of Education, both as a student and a teacher, is Harrell Garrison, '31. Dr. Garrison has just completed his ninth year as president of Northeastern State College, Tahlequah. Garrison taught in Oklahoma schools and then was director of student teaching at North Texas State Teachers College, Denton. For two years he was professor of elementary education at O.U. During his tenure at Northeastern, he has seen growth not only in enrolment, buildings and land, but in the faculty. Twenty-five doctoral degrees have been added to the faculty as well as 15 new positions.

Fine Arts

Although graduates of the College of Fine Arts may seem immersed in aesthetics, their practical contributions in teaching and in the world of entertainment cannot be denied.

A Sooner who has combined both these talents is Joseph Benton, '20ba, '21bfa in voice, '41ma. Benton has been a professor of music at O.U. since 1944. Under the name of Giuseppe Bentonelli, he was acclaimed one of the leading tenors of the European opera stage from 1924 to 1935. He appeared with the Chicago Opera and the Metropolitan Opera and on nation-wide concert tours before bringing his talents to teaching at the University.

Dennis Weaver, '48bfa, has found another medium of entertainment in which the College of Fine Arts is also well represented. As "Chester" on Gunsmoke, Weaver and his "Mister Dillon" have become familiar to millions of viewers. An University track star, Weaver has utilized his O.U. study to correspond to contemporary entertainment.

Pharmacy

From the College of Pharmacy came the first graduating class. Now more than 1,500 have received degrees and entered all phases of the profession from selling the drugs to their manufacture to the fundamental research where new drugs are discovered.

James Bradley, '50pharm, is one of those concerned with producing the drugs. He became president of Smith-Dorsey Pharmaceutical Company, Lincoln, Neb., in January. The company distributes their products nationally, specializing in drugs for colds and allergies. Bradley worked first as a retail druggist. Then he joined a pharmaceutical house as a salesman, advanced to district and regional manager and on to director of sales and promotion before joining Smith-Dorsey.

Or a pharmacy graduate may take another path in serving the public as Wallace Taylor, '40pharm. After military service Taylor returned to Norman and in 1944 purchased a drug store. In 1959 Taylor expanded with another Norman store. He is typical of countless other pharmacists across the state in his service and skill. In fact, so much so that about 1,800 retail druggists have chosen him president for the coming year of the Oklahoma Pharmaceutical Association.

Coming in the May Sooner

Fourteen O.U. drama students along with Rupel J. Jones, drama school director, are now hopscotching across the Pacific, presenting "George Washington Slept Here" to American servicemen on bases ranging from Tokyo to Manila. The once-in-a-lifetime chance to tour the Orient became theirs last summer when the University was selected to send a roadshow to military installations on behalf of the USO and in cooperation with the American Educational Theater Association and the Department of Defense.

The May issue of Sooner Magazine will feature a story and pictures on the backbreaking work and Chinese puzzle dilemmas met and solved by the troupe before its gay departure April 4. In addition to reams of paperwork on passports and shots, troupe members had to fit nightly rehearsals into busy schedules calling for completion of a semester's work in eight weeks.
