How did you spend summer vacations when you were a student in college?

DAVID D. RUDKIN, '62ed
Fort Sam Houston
San Antonio, Texas

RUDKIN—I worked two summers with the U. S. Forest Service in Idaho, clearing fire trails and game trails and other conservation work. It was a good and different kind of experience, but a person can get rather lonely doing that type of work. We almost lost all of our contacts with civilization. It was about 40 miles from the nearest town [St. Maries, Idaho], and we didn't go into town but four or five times . . . I liked being outdoors. I had worked on farms and construction crews before I went to Idaho, and, in later summers, I worked for REA and the city park department in Norman. In fact, I didn't know what it was like to work sitting down before now, and this is the first summer that I have worked indoors.

ROBERTS—I had already started in show business before I came to O.U. But when illness came in the family, I returned home and wouldn't leave, and, as a result, I was fortunate enough to get a college education . . . During the summers when I was in school, I was about as far from any dancing activities as you can get. One summer, I worked with a section gang on a railroad, which is a very rough type of work. I came from a railroad family, and this work helped me to better realize and appreciate the value of a dollar . . . Some of the guys that worked with us were from O.U. and several came from wealthy families, so it was more interesting in that respect . . . The next summer, I worked with a bridge gang. The work was called b and b or bridge and building, and it was a little easier than the previous summer.

MRS. SANDSTROM—I generally stayed at home [Wichita, Kansas] during the summer months, but I did spend one summer in Yellowstone National Park where my roommate and I worked as waitresses in a restaurant. I had a lot of fun that summer, because it was like going to college, but with no classes and no closing hours . . . I certainly recommend working in a resort area such as the one we were in. BRANDENBURG—During most of the summers when I was in school, I would go to New Mexico, in and around Taos, to fish and play tennis [captain of the O.U. tennis team in 1926]. My brother Jack and I and a few others who were interested in tennis worked up some clay courts one summer and organized a tennis club. After we got it going, we would have inter-city matches with Santa Fe, Albuquerque and some of the other surrounding towns . . . Also, in the summers between school periods, I participated in tennis tournaments mainly around Colorado and New Mexico. I went to Denver one summer. Colorado had an open tournament that would attract crack players who were rated nationally. There was a lot of interest involved, and it was a big thrill for me to go there.
