From the Sooner Magazine, January 1954, "The Sweetest of All Time":

The situation: a poor kick had caught the Oklahoma Sooners deep in their own territory. The place: Miami's Orange Bowl extravaganza. The time: early in the first quarter. The opposition: Maryland's national champions. Maryland moved the ball with precision to Oklahoma's 4-yard line for a first down. On the first play Maryland made a slight gain. On the second play, Maryland added a few feet to her position. Third down and about two yards to go. Maryland moved to about the 1-yard line. It was hard to tell. Anyway, there was some space between the ball and the goal line. Maryland's center moved over the ball. Quarterback Boxhold crouched behind him. The ball was snapped. Bedlam broke loose in the Orange Bowl stadium. Oklahoma had held. In the second quarter Larry Grigg scored on an end sweep. Buddy Leake converted. The final score, Oklahoma, 7, Maryland, 0. Highlights: The fine play of reserve quarterback Jack Van Pool in the last half when he had to carry the load after Gene Calame was injured; Jack Ging's running in the closing four minutes of play that kept the ball in Oklahoma's possession and ruled out a Maryland tie.

From the Sooner Magazine, January, 1944, "December Commencement":

Speaking at midwinter commencement exercises in the Field House, Gov. Robert S. Kerr commended the University on its progress in the past and pointed out that it must prepare for days of greater service in the postwar era. "When the war ends, American colleges and universities must be prepared for an enrollment of from four to six million. These halls will be crowded. This campus will echo to the marching feet of ever-increasing numbers of men and women who will seek and have the right to receive here the best educational advantages obtainable anywhere."

From "Clearing the Desk": How many readers have heard the title song from the popular musical show Oklahoma!? Aviation Cadet Neal J. Mosley, '43eng, writes from New Haven where he is attending an Air Corps school at Yale that he believes this song would make a good school song for O.U. if permission could be secured to adopt it for that purpose. He points out that the show was adapted from a story written by an O.U. man, Lynn Riggs, '23, and that the show "will do much to preserve the heritage of our own state." Anybody second the motion?

John Nesom, '43bus, assistant director of motion picture production at the University, had 71 of his photographs on exhibit in the second-floor gallery of the O.U. Museum of Art in December.

From the Sooner Magazine, January 1934, "Federal Aid on the Campus":

Brooks Street, in front of the Library, and Asp Avenue, in front of the Union, are being paved by CWA workers. New sidewalks to take the place of brick walks are under construction, and several buildings are getting new paint, inside and out. The cost of paving the two streets, building the seven stretches of sidewalks and painting the buildings will be $42,000, of which the University will furnish one-third.

From "A Good Start," by Harold Keith: A new home attendance record of 52,286 for four home games, an average of more than 13,000 for each game at Owen Field, was established this year and added to the 58,729 spectators before whom the Sooners played in five road game shoots, brings the total 1933 attendance to 111,015. Two of the Norman crowds this fall were the second and third largest in the University's history, the Oklahoma Aggie and Vanderbilt games. Back in 1928, the Nebraska-Oklahoma game here attracted the record high of 18,346. Spectators at the Oklahoma-Texas game at Fair Park stadium (won by Texas, 9-0) were deprived of seeing what otherwise would have been a sensational game by a poorly sodded field. Rain the preceding night had made the gridiron a quagmire; consequently, neither team could show much offensive power or versatility.

From January, 1924, issues of the Oklahoma Daily: When five University faculty members—Dean Julien C. Monnett, dean of law school; John Alley, professor of government; Dr. F. F. Blackly, professor of government; Dr. J. B. Cheadle, professor of law, and S. W. Swenson, assistant professor of government—were questioned regarding America's present relations with Europe, they united in stating that the program of isolation now being carried out by the United States is a mistake and that some method should be devised whereby our government would participate in world affairs. . . . Mah-Jongg as a new fad has either not reached Norman or the devotees are going out of the city to buy their sets. During the past Christmas season, merchants reported only 25 sets sold. . . . University women are rapidly tiring of the short hair style and the irony of it all is that university men who until recently have been opposed to bobbed hair, are beginning to favor it. . . . The laying of the cornerstone of the new $575,000 McFarlin Memorial Methodist Church will be held January 20 according to Rev. L. S. Barton. . . . Oklahoma won from Drake, 44-28. O.U. fouled nine times, Drake once. McBride, Sooner forward, was high point man with eight field goals. Wallace, Sooner guard, had seven from the field. The Sooners made no free throws, having only one attempt. . . . At the movies: Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood and Pola Negri in The Spanish Dancer.
