TO PRESERVE THE THEATRE ORGAN

When we started many years ago as a group of hobbyists, the idea of 'preserving' meant to remove and take home a theatre organ or sit around under a drop light in a dark auditorium with a large group of six or seven and moon over the death of the instruments. Times have changed. We now have new responsibilities.

The real sound is developed in large spaces. Even the largest home must have artificial reverb to give full dimension for the pipe's abilities. The development of young artists to carry on the use of the instruments we are preserving demands access to a public willing to pay for their entertainment and that means either theatres or other public auditoriums. This movement is developing.

Doesn't our success now mean that we should, as chapters at least, turn more of our attention to the restoration in place or use in schools of the organs remaining rather than just being a social group? If we give the owner or management some reason to see that there are people willing to pay for their fun then the king of instruments becomes an asset rather than a nuisance.

Social life with other interested people is fun and an integral part of our chapter life but it doesn't give our favorite music much future. Support your local chapter by joining it as well as the national. Maybe there are more members in your area who would enjoy having a chapter.

Come to the Chicago Convention, have fun and also learn the ropes on producing shows featuring the pipes and silent movies.
